

Key to the Gate of Romance"

Five Complete Stories
Five Cents

The Black Cat

Key to the Gate of Romance.
David Bruce Fitzgerald.

Star-Eyes.
W. T. Fernandez.

In the Cane Belt.
Juliet Bayne.

The New Minister.
Don Mark Lemon.

The Turning Worm.
Emma C. Wood.

Vol. X., No. 11. Whole No. 119. Copyright, 1905, by
The Shortstory Publishing Co.

AUGUST

THE SHORTSTORY PUBLISHING CO.
144 HIGH STREET, BOSTON, MASS.
and 10 Norfolk Street, Strand,
London, W. C.

1905

Weapons for the Summer Campaign.

THEY come in tan, dull-finish, patent leather, and linen. The makers of Sorosis are the only shoe manufacturers in the world that actually make all their own lasts and patterns. This accounts for that elegance of contour and perfection of fit which is a peculiar quality of all shoes bearing the trademark Sorosis.

Ask for Sorosis Trees, made from the original Sorosis lasts. They are a great aid toward keeping the shoes in perfect shape.

SOROSIS STORES AND DEPARTMENTS:

New York: James McCreery & Co., 23d Street

Brooklyn: Corner Fulton and Hoyt Streets

Philadelphia: 1314 Chestnut Street

Baltimore: 19 Lexington Street, West

Chicago: 34 Washington Street, Venetian Building

Pittsburg: Penn. Avenue and 5th Street and 214 Sixth Street

Boston: 20 Temple Place and 176 Boylston Street

Denver: 626 Sixteenth Street

San Francisco: 216 Post Street

London: { Regent House, Regent Street

{ 19 Westbourne Grove

{ 83 Brompton Road

AND ALL OTHER LARGE CITIES

For
TOILET

And BATH

When baby washed, his ardent key would very often reach high C
but now in sheer delight he'll crow when bathed with

HAND SAPOLIO

BOSTON & MAINE R. R.

Summer Publications

DESCRIPTIVE OF

New England Scenery and Summer Resorts

Fully illustrated and containing valuable maps

Fishing and Hunting All Along Shore

Lakes and Streams

Among the Mountains

The Valley of the Connecticut and Northern Vermont

Southeast New Hampshire

Hoosac Country and Deerfield Valley

Southwest New Hampshire

Ferrisack Valley Lake Sunapee

Central Massachusetts

Lake Memphremagog and About There

The Monadnock Region

Excursion and Summer Hotel Book—Free

Any one of the above Publications sent on receipt of Two Cents in Stamps

A COLORED BIRD'S-EYE VIEW From Mt. Washington, or a Colored Bird's-Eye View of Lake Winnepesaukee

Either of the above will be sent on receipt of SIX CENTS in STAMPS

PORTFOLIOS

A Series of Beautiful Half-Tone Reproductions of Photographs taken expressly for these works, illustrating New England Scenery: have been published under the following titles:

New England Lakes

Rivers of New England

Mountains of New England

Seashore of New England

Picturesque New England

(Historic-Miscellaneous)

The Charles River to the Hudson

Size of Illustrations, 4 x 6 Inches

Will be mailed upon receipt of SIX CENTS for each Book

Address

PASSENGER DEPARTMENT
BOSTON & MAINE R. R.
Boston, Mass.

D. J. FLANDERS, General Passenger and Ticket Agent.

THE FOUR-TRACK NEWS

The Great Illustrated Magazine of Travel and Education

150 OR MORE PAGES MONTHLY.

Its scope and character are indicated by the following titles of articles that have appeared in recent issues; all profusely illustrated:

Eleven Hours of Afternoon	Cy Werners
The Americanization of Paris	Alexander Evans Ford
Summer in Winter	Miss J. Searge
Where Blue Met Gray—Poem	Thomas C. Harbaugh
Some Animal Models	Julia B. Quinn
Where Every Prospect Pleases	Kirk Evans
New England Witchcraft	M. Inlay Taylor
Time Defying Temples	Allen Day
New York From An Air Ship	Betha Smith
A King on American Soil	T. D. Macomber
New Zealand	T. E. Evans
The Limited Express—Poem	Nelson Waterman
Tent-Life	Sir Edwin Arnold
The Nub End of Canada	Frank Veitch
Corral and Lasso	Minnie J. Reynolds
Santo Domingo	Frederick A. Ober

SINGLE COPIES 10 CENTS, or $1.00 A YEAR.

FOREIGN COUNTRIES $1.50.

Can be obtained of newdealers, or by addressing

GEORGE H. DANIELS, Publisher,

Room 44, 7 East 42d Street, New York

Hints for the Vacation.

An attractive 150-page pamphlet, full of the temptation of river, field and mountain, is published by the Central Vermont Railway, under the style, "Summer Homes of Vermont, Islands and Shores of Lake Champlain, Adirondacks, and Canada." It is filled with excellent pictures of Summer-time scenes in places far from the press of city life. There are complete descriptions of the various resorts, convenient time-tables and lists of special excursion rates, of which the wise may take advantage. Those who have not yet settled the great question as to where the vacation shall be spent can hardly do better than consult this pamphlet, which may be obtained by sending six cents in stamps to J. E. Bentley, General Passenger Agent, Central Vermont Railway, St. Albans, Vt.

SOCIALISM

¶ There is possibly no other subject which is discussed so widely as socialism is at the present time and few seem to know what it means.

¶ If you have any desire to be up to date you must subscribe for Wilshire's Magazine. This is the largest and most influential socialist magazine in the world.

¶ We are getting in new subscriptions at the rate of from one to three thousand per day. Send 10 cents for a year's subscription at once.

WILSHIRE'S MAGAZINE
45 Beach Bldg., NEW YORK CITY

CAN MUSIC BE TAUGHT BY MAIL?

We make you judge and jury. We teach by mail only, beginners or advanced pupils to play any instrument by note. Nothing to pay until you have had two weeks' trial. If these lessons do not convince you that you will succeed, then they are free. Do not write unless you want to learn, and are in earnest. Mention whether a beginner or advanced pupil. Send 2-cent stamp and get the trial lesson, Booklet and testimonials. Established 17 years. Address U. S. SCHOOL OF MUSIC, Box 527, 19 UNION SQUARE, NEW YORK, N. Y.

VENTRILOQUISM

Learned by anyone at home. Small cost. Send 2-cent stamp for particulars and proof. O. A. SMITH, Box N, 2040 Knoxville Ave., FLORIDA, ILL.

IF YOU ARE A WRITER

We can aid you to find a market for anything you write. MSS. SUCCESSFULLY PLACED. Criticized, Revised, Typewritten. References: Edwin Markham, Margaret E. Sangster, and others. Established 1890. Send for leaflet E.

UNITED LITERARY PRESS 127 5th AVE. NEW YORK.

SONGS PUBLISHED ON ROYALTY.

Send us your Songs, Poems and Inst. MSS., published or unpublished. We advertise, popularize and publish. NORTH AMERICAN MUSIC CO., Dept. C, 59 W. 28th St., New York

WRITE A AND MAKE MONEY SONG

We compose music to your words and pay royalty.

Miller Co., 1118 51st Ave., Chicago

WRITERS

The Monthly Calendar for August contains result of first prize contest and statement of present editorial needs. Copy mailed for 6 cents in stamps. CALENDAR PUBLISHING CO., 1122 Broadway, Toledo, Ohio

ROYALTY PAID

—ON—

SONG-POEMS

and Musical Compositors. We arrange and popularize. PIONEER MUSIC PUB. CO. (Inc.) C 262 Manhattan Building - CHICAGO, ILL.

WRITE A SONG

And Make a FORTUNE!

We compose music to your words.

GROOM MUSIC CO.

4 STEINWAY HALL, CHICAGO

MUSIC LESSONS

Send for our FREE booklet. It is how to learn to play any instrument. Piano, Organ, Violin, Guitar, Mandolin, etc. Write American School of Music, 206 Manhattan Building, Chicago, Illinois.

GOOD PIANO TUNERS

Earn $5 to $15 per day

We can teach you quickly BY MAIL. The new scientific Tune-a-Phone method endorsed by highest authorities. Knowledge of music not necessary. Write for free booklet.

Miles Bryant School, 99 Music Hall, Battle Creek, Mich.

25.00

If You Earn Less

I can DOUBLE your salary or income by teaching you how to write catchy, intelligent advertising.

My System of Instruction by Mail is the only one in existence that has the hearty endorsement of the great experts and publishers, and is so anxious to make prospects, together with the most remarkable facsimile proof ever given in the history of correspondence instruction, if you are interested. I will show you how to earn from $5 to $500 per week.

Geo. H. Powell, 1541 Temple Court, N.Y.

Per Week

Have You LITERARY TALENT

If so, you owe it to yourself to develop it. Nearly every magazine in the country is calling for original material. We can make you a Journalist by mail. Write at once for free particulars. Sprague Correspondence School of Journalism, 251 Majestic Building, Detroit Mich.

Authors' Agency.

Send stamp for New Booklet to WM. A. DRESSER,

R. 10, 400 Broadway, Cambridge, Mass.

Mention The Black Cat.

BE A NURSE

YOU CAN IF YOU WILL

Our courses, specially prepared for home study, qualify you, without loss of time, to be a Trained Nurse—the best and most remunerative profession for women. Our graduates earn from $5 to $20 per week. Ours is the oldest school teaching nursing by mail. Book describing five courses sent free at your request. Chicago Correspondence School of Nursing, 828, 46 Van Buren Street, Chicago.

WILL BUY YOUR STORIES.

You can learn to write in a few months' time the kind of stories editors want. Your critic will be an editor of many years' experience. This is the best paying home work for women in the world; but you cannot succeed quickly without practical criticism from an experienced writer and editor. Those who write under our criticism do not have their manuscripts returned. Drop us a postal and we will tell you why. Address, Department Short-Story Writing, Desk 226.

PAGE-DAVIS COMPANY

90 WABASH AVE. CHICAGO, ILL.

STORIES SOLD MSS. REVISED

Story Writing and Journalism taught by mail; MSS. criticized and revised; also, sold and syndicated on commission. Send for free booklet, "Writing for Profit"; it tells how.—THE NATIONAL PAESS ASSOC'N, 68 The Baldwin, Indianapolis, Ind.

WRITERS

DO YOU WANT CASH FOR YOUR WORK?

ARTISTS

We want stories, poems, jokes, illustrations, designs and photographs for publication. Immediate payment. BURELL SYNDICATE, 650 GRAMERCY BUILDING, NEW YORK and the little family in your cheerful home is still unprotected from the trials of financial stress if you should be suddenly taken away.

ANOTHER MONTH GONE !

Save them that trial. Save a little money which now goes for incidentals, and let it build a barrier wall against the attacks of want, when such protection is most needed.

The PRUDENTIAL

can help you build that wall. It is no idle catch phrase that has inseparably linked the Prudential name with the rock of Gibraltar. It has the strength of Gibraltar, and you may well use its resources, its solidity, its liberal terms of insurance to safeguard the financial welfare of your family.

THE PRUDENTIAL

INSURANCE COMPANY OF AMERICA

Incorporated as a Stock Company by the State of New Jersey

JOHN F. DRYDEN
President

Home Office
NEWARK, N. J.

A SPECIAL DEPARTMENT

is maintained by The Prudential for furnishing information by mail to persons investigating and contemplating Life Insurance. We will be pleased to send particulars of any policy you may wish if you will inform us as to the amount you desire to invest each year. Participating Endowment Policies of the Prudential furnish the two-fold object of protecting your family and providing a guaranteed and profitable investment for yourself.

Without committing myself to any action I shall be glad to receive, free, particulars of Endowment Policies.

Amount
Name
Address Apt.
Occupation Dept. 88

also this coupon

THE
PRUDENTIAL
HAS THE
STRENGTH OF
GIBRALTAR

The Black Cat

A Monthly Magazine of Original Short Stories.

Copyright, 1905, by The Shortstory Publishing Company. All rights reserved.

Vol. X., No. 11.
Whole No., 119.

AUGUST, 1905.

5 cents a copy.
10 cents a year.

Entered at the Post-Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class matter.

THE BLACK CAT is devoted exclusively to original, unusual, fascinating stories—every number is complete in itself. It publishes no serials, translations, borrowings, or stealings. It pays nothing for the name or reputation of a writer, but the highest price on record for Stories that are Stories, and it pays not according to length, but according to strength. To receive attention, manuscripts must be sent unrolled, fully prepaid, and accompanied by addressed and stamped envelope for return. All MSS. are received and returned at their writers' risk.

CAUTION.—The entire contents of THE BLACK CAT are protected by copyright, and publishers everywhere are cautioned against reproducing any of the stories, either wholly or in part.

Key to the Gate of Romance.*

BY DAVID BRUCE FITZGERALD.

HERE was a marked contrast between the two men who sat on opposite sides of the open fireplace, in which thin, blue flames curled upward from surface seams in the glowing bed of coke. They were alike only in being well under thirty. Professor Fillmore, the host, was tall and heavy, with gray eyes and thick, tawny hair, which curled at the ends. His bulk suggested courage and aggressiveness; but, with these qualities, he united the introspectiveness of the student and the self-consciousness of one who has lived much apart from practical affairs. In his own department of mathematics he was confident enough, feeling that he there dealt with absolute certainties and finalities; but life looked to him like an equation containing the signs of addition, subtraction, multiplication and division, but in which there was no place for the sign of equality; a rather meaningless, ill-balanced jumble of uncertain quantities, among which, because it was impossible to determine their true values, it was necessary to thread a cautious way. In Columbia University, where he was an assistant professor, he was regarded as a rising man, and there was talk of creating a chair for his occupancy. Professor Fillmore felt that in this event he would ask Dorothy

* Copyright, 1905, by The Shortstory Publishing Company. All rights reserved.

* Copyright secured in Great Britain.

Morgan to marry him. He had been in love with her for two years, but had never been able to make up his mind that his salary and prospects justified a definite statement of his regard; and he was aware of a vague anxiety, based on a growing fear that he might eventually lose her.

Doctor Langdon, the guest, was thin, dark, alert, prematurely bald, with a lean, clearly-cut face, which habitually wore a joyous smile. He was dressed with scrupulous care, and his movements were unconsciously precise and confident. The only son of a very wealthy man, he was still doing wonders in his profession, and thereby contradicting numerous expectations touching his probable usefulness to society. His intimacy with Professor Fillmore was one of those things which can be explained only by those who understand the mystery of the attraction which human opposites exert on each other.

"As I was saying, Fillmore," remarked Doctor Langdon, "the trouble with the average student is that he walks his little round of study and investigation without ever seeing the point at which his specialty touches life. He thinks of himself as doing something apart and which is worth while only for its own sake, instead of regarding it as a key which, if he used it, would unlock the gates of romantic gardens and the doors of mysterious houses."

"You're off there, so far as mathematics is concerned," replied Fillmore. "It deals only with quantities, and has no more to do with human emotions or relationships than astronomy has."

"Your illustration is unfortunate," said the young doctor, puffing a cloud of smoke at the ceiling. "Astronomy really exercises a tremendous influence on all human affairs, from births to battles. The sun and moon have as many romances to their credit as the meadows or the forests can score. Now, since you've suggested it, take your own specialty. There is such a thing as the mathematical theory of probabilities. It amounts to the statement, which can be expressed in the form of an equation, that purely as a matter of chance any given event will happen sooner or later. But did it ever occur to you to make a practical application of this mathematical certainty? As we sit here, we are not more than a couple of miles from the very heart of New York. Well, something unusual happens in New York every minute. Tragedy and comedy are always being played in every square. Ten thousand unbelievably fantastic events are working themselves out. Yet, I venture to say, you see little or nothing of all this. Why? Because when you go outside the door you take a predetermined course; you know exactly where you will go and what you will do; you exclude chance as a directive element in your activities. Now, if you would only make up your mind not to walk in your little, beaten path, but would give yourself up to whim, to caprice, to the passing suggestion, to the impulse of the moment, you would face life squarely, you would be let into the mystery, you would learn the occult word, the open sesame of entrance and exit at all portals."

"There is an obvious fallacy in your reasoning," observed Professor Fillmore, taking the half-whimsical remarks of his friend seriously. "If one should simply drift about New York, he would, in course of time, find himself in contact with every phase of life; but it might be years before he had his first unusual experience, and it would take him several centuries to make the entire round."

"Yes, Mr. Dry-as-Dust Professor of Mathematics. On the other side, his first day out might involve him in some startling adventure. He might witness a murder, find a valuable diamond in the gutter, be called on to assist in the elopement of an heiress with the family coachman, quiet a panic in a theatre, and have his picture in all the papers next morning; do no end of bizarre things. Between you and me, and merely as a matter of curiosity, I'm going to try it sometime."

"So am I," said the Professor, with the slow, reflective accent of a scientific man coming to a conclusion. "Saturday will be my first free day, and I will give it up to the experiment. I will have a certain professional interest in noting the outcome, though I haven't the least expectation of finding myself involved in an adventure."

"Good for you, old chap," cried Doctor Langdon, rising. "I wish I could go with you, but I happen to have an important engagement for the forenoon of Saturday. However, come and dine with me at the Twenty-first Century Club at seven o'clock, and give me an account of your experiences."

Fillmore promised.

"I suppose you realize the necessity of making yourself the mere sport of events," remarked Langdon, drawing on his overcoat.

"Meaning?"

"That if anything points a way, take it; if any one offers a suggestion, accept it. When in doubt, flip a coin or read a billboard for advice. Don't try to set a course. Simply let yourself drift."

"Yes; I understand that."

"Well, good luck to you; and don't forget to come to dinner;" and Doctor Langdon, smiling to himself, ran down the steps and sprang aboard his automobile.

Professor Fillmore lived in a small hotel in Brooklyn. On Saturday morning, after breakfast, he left the house, and was immediately confronted by the question of which way to turn. Standing on the curb, he glanced up and down the quiet street, but could fix on nothing which seemed to indicate a direction. While feeling in his pocket for a coin, he was accosted by a shabbily-dressed man, who asked for five cents to pay his way across the ferry. The request conveyed an unmistakable suggestion. Instead of tossing the nickel in the air, Fillmore placed it in the mendicant's hand, and himself took the next car going in the direction of the East River.

Forty-five minutes later, as he was sauntering up lower Broadway, Fillmore encountered the same man; and, on the basis of their slight, previous acquaintance, the fellow immediately addressed him.

"You see, Colonel," he remarked, "I used that nickel you gave me just as I said I would. You don't happen to have any work I could do for you? No? Well, if I don't find anything in this end of town, I'm going up to Forty-third Street, and I think I can git a job."

Professor Fillmore was aware only that the man had mentioned a certain thoroughfare. Forty-third Street! Well, in the absence of any other intimation of how his wanderings should be regulated, he would go to Forty-third Street. The silliness of following indications derived from the casual remarks of a street beggar occurred to him, but he resolutely declined to consider that phase of it. So far as his experiment was concerned, the pointing of a straw was as significant as an unexpected request to visit the President of the United States.

"Cab, sir?" said a voice at his ear.

Fillmore had thought of taking the elevated, but it was plainly not intended that he should. On that particular day, an invitation was equivalent to a command.

"Yes," he replied, turning toward the open door of the vehicle.

"Drive me to Forty-third Street."

"All right, sir," said the man, closing the door on his fare.

The cab was blocked a time or two before it succeeded in reaching the clearer side streets, but Fillmore, who was reading a morning paper, took no notice of the delays. There was no imaginable reason why he should be in a hurry. Indeed, absorbed in a long editorial on the Eastern Question, he was rather surprised at the shortness of the time before the vehicle drew up at the curb and stopped.

"Here we are, sir," said the driver, opening the door. "This is the house."

"But I did not tell you to drive me to any particular house," replied Fillmore, quickly.

"You didn't?" returned the man with obvious bewilderment.

"I certainly did not. I merely directed you to take me to Forty-third Street."

"Well, sir, I can't say how I came to make the mistake of thinking you mentioned a number; but I guess there's no great harm done."

"I will get out here," said the Professor, suddenly realizing that, because mere chance had brought him to it, this particular house was directly associated with his experiment. He paid and dismissed the cabman; then turned and carefully scrutinized the tall front of the residence before which he had been set down. It was a typical New York house of the better class; it stood in the middle of the block; it was precisely like its neighbors on either side; and it did not present a single feature which conveyed a message to Fillmore's mind. But either he must abandon his experiment or try to enter the house. Had anything less important than the attempted application of a mathematical theory been involved, the Professor would never have found courage to mount the steps and ring the bell, but, with the feeling that he was engaged in verifying or disproving the correctness of a famous and accepted equation, he did not hesitate. Because it was the first name which occurred to him, he resolved to ask for Mr. William Smith; of course expecting, after being told that Mr. Smith did not live there, to have the door closed in his face. This, however, would not break the continuity of his experiment; whereas failure to seek entrance to the house would. He pushed the button; and presently the door was opened by a stolid-looking butler.

"Does Mr. William Smith live here?" Fillmore asked, boldly.

"Yes, sir," replied the butler, in a matter-of-fact way.

"Is he at home?" The Professor clutched desperately at the chance, amounting to a probability, that he wasn't.

"Yes, sir. Please step into the library, and I'll tell him you are here."

"I—I haven't an appointment with him," Fillmore gasped, horribly conscious of the entanglement into which he had stumbled.

"No, sir; but he said he particularly wanted to see you in case you called."

"It's Professor Samuel Fillmore." The caller pronounced his own name with marked distinctness, assured it would convince the butler that he was not the person whom the master of the house was expecting.

"Yes, sir; Professor Samuel Fillmore. I'll let Mr. Smith know you are here, sir."

Fillmore dropped into one of the leather chairs in the heavily furnished library. He was too flurried to consider the extraordinary coincidence involved in finding a man whose name corresponded with one of which he had casually and hastily thought. All his faculties were bent to the invention of a reason which would satisfactorily explain to the real William Smith why he had sought entrance to his house, for it was clearly some one else who was expected. During five or ten minutes of waiting, the caller debated the question of whether it would be better to profess that he was looking for another and quite different William Smith, and had been misled by an address in the city directory, or whether a frank statement of the experiment he was making would be understood by Mr. Smith, and would be regarded by him as a sufficient excuse for the intrusion of an entire stranger. These deliberations were inconclusive, but were cut short by the entrance of a tall, elderly man, whose white hair and mustache strongly accentuated a naturally distinguished personality. His dark, searching eyes gleamed beneath bushy brows, his linen was immaculate, his long frock coat was carefully buttoned. He was the embodiment of straightforwardness and respectability.

"I beg your pardon, sir," said Fillmore, rising, and quickly determining that this man's intelligence, though acute, was not of the scientific type, "I fear I have made a mistake. You are not the Mr. Smith for whom I was looking."

"Still, I am glad to see you, Professor Fillmore," replied Mr. Smith, extending his hand. "However, I unfortunately have an appointment I must hurry to keep, and you will excuse me if I mention at once the matter I have in mind. I am going to entrust to you, Professor, a somewhat valuable little package of papers. After you leave this house, please take the first cab you find, drive to the St. Catherine Hotel, in Brooklyn, and ask to be shown to room thirty-seven. When you have locked yourself in, open the package and examine its contents. Remain in the room until two o'clock this afternoon; then leave the hotel by the front door, and walk east on the right-hand side of the street. I believe that is all, except to deplore the trouble to which I am putting you."

"But, my dear sir," cried Fillmore, struggling with an amazement he was unable to express, "there is some grave misunderstanding on your part. You are entirely unacquainted with me, and I can imagine no possible reason why you should entrust me with a commission, especially one which, as you have intimated, involves some responsibility."

"I assure you there is no mistake, sir," returned Mr. Smith, with the tone and manner of one discussing the most ordinary matter of business. "I understand perfectly what I am doing. Of course, if you are not willing to undertake the commission, I cannot insist, but I am of the opinion that you will find it to your advantage to accept my suggestions."

"Perhaps I should explain that I am in a peculiar position, which will not allow me to decline any suggestion made to me to-day," said Fillmore. "If I do as you say, it will be entirely because I am engaged in applying a certain mathematical theory to practical affairs."

"That is at once beyond me and quite unnecessary," replied Mr. Smith, with a smile which seemed to express regret of his inability to follow the special intellectual processes of his guest. "Here is the package of which I have spoken."

He placed in Fillmore's hand a large, stout manila envelope, sealed, but unaddressed, and containing a somewhat bulky enclosure. The Professor hesitatingly weighed it between his thumb and finger; then thrust it into the inner pocket of his coat. Mr. Smith, with unfailing courtesy, accompanied his guest to the door, and cordially wished him good-day. Fillmore found a cab at the second corner; and, during the drive back to Brooklyn, could think of nothing except the astonishing revisions which his experiences promised to make necessary in the sphere of the higher mathematics. The accepted theory of probabilities would certainly not account for the remarkable series of fortuitous incidents he had encountered; and, so far as he was able to determine, other equally mysterious links were yet to be added to the chain. He wondered whether, by prolonging his experiment, by taking it up day after day, by devoting the next long vacation to it, he could accumulate factors for an equation which would show the true chance element in everything. The strangeness of his reception at the house in Forty-third Street, the identity and motives of Mr. William Smith, the conjectural contents of the manila envelope, the extraordinary instructions by which he was to regulate his movements during the remainder of the forenoon and at least a part of the afternoon, were all subordinate, as subjects for consideration, to the purely professional interest he felt in the problem presented to his mind. He was not a very imaginative man, and he wasted no time in mere aimless groping through a fog-bank of mystery, or in seeking fantastic explanations of obscurities.

In the unpretentious office of the St. Catherine Hotel, which was much like the one in which he lived, Fillmore asked whether he could have room thirty-seven for a couple of hours.

"Are you the gentleman who reserved it yesterday by telephone?" inquired the clerk.

"My name is Fillmore," was the guarded reply.

"Yes, sir, that's right; Professor Fillmore. Here, Charley, show the gentleman to thirty-seven."

As Mr. William Smith's intimation had prepared him for this development, Fillmore was not greatly surprised. He followed the bell-boy to number thirty-seven, a small, comfortably-furnished parlor, with an alcoved bedroom attached. After locking the door and lighting a cigar the Professor seated himself at the centre table and tore the end from the manila envelope. What he found temporarily stupefied him. The envelope contained twenty-five one-thousand-dollar bills. There was also a written inclosure; a note, penned in a heavy, angular hand. It read:

NEW YORK, JANUARY 23, 1904.

PROF. SAMUEL FILLMORE, Brooklyn.

Dear Sir: You are possibly not aware that, some years ago, your father was swindled out of twenty-five thousand dollars by a man who is now a client of mine, but who prefers that his identity shall not be disclosed. Purely as a matter of conscience, this person now desires to make restitution; and he begs that you will consent to refrain from investigating any of the circumstances of the case.

Very truly yours,

WILLIAM SMITH.

As he read, and repeatedly reviewed, this note, so curt in its phraseology, so brusque in its brevity, so unsatisfactory every way, except in its explicitness, Fillmore felt that it would be impossible, at the moment, to assign this new and extraordinary circumstance to the place it should occupy in his experiment. The bills on the table dragged him down, as he admitted to himself, to a non-reflective and purely emotional plane. With his simple, scholarly tastes, twenty-five thousand dollars meant to him independence. He dwelt on this for a moment; then his thoughts flew to Dorothy Morgan. He had always hesitated about asking her to marry him, because — well, merely because his salary had seemed so inadequate, in view of the possible emergencies of life in New York. Multitudinous small establishments, as he was aware, were supported on less than he annually received; but he had never understood how men and woman dared thus to tempt fate or providence or whatever they called it. But would not a reserve fund of twenty-five thousand dollars eliminate the element of foolhardiness? After setting down some rows of figures on the back of the manila envelope, Fillmore decided that it would. It did not occur to him to question his own right to the money. True, he had never heard of the transaction to which Mr. Smith referred in his note; but he was aware that his father, during the later years of his life, had met with heavy losses, which had reduced him to poverty. These twenty-five thousand dollars probably represented an unfortunate investment in some company which existed only on paper; and the conscience-stricken promoter was now endeavoring to reimburse his victims or their legal representatives. It was an unusual, but not unimaginable, proceeding.

Fillmore quickly reviewed and dismissed this phase of the situation. To the other side of it, that which related to Dorothy Morgan, he devoted a much more careful and prolonged consideration, the outcome of which was a decision to call on her that very evening and ask her to marry him. Of course, until the matter was settled between them, he would say nothing to her about the money which had so mysteriously come into his possession. It would not do to create on her mind the impression that his proposal was in any way due to elation following a sudden windfall.

In accordance with Mr. William Smith's instructions, Professor Fillmore remained in the room at the St. Catherine Hotel until two o'clock. Then, after assuring himself that the money was carefully stowed in his pocket, he descended to the street and turned eastward. His mind again reverted to his experiment; and he confessed to himself a keen curiosity to learn what the next development would be. Indeed, because it seemed to have no special significance, he was quite impatient of an incident which momentarily detained him. This was the offer, on the part of a street gamin, to sell him a dog for fifty cents. Fillmore, who had no place to keep a dog, would gladly have declined; but on this particular day he had no option in the matter. He hastily put a half-dollar in the urchin's hand, took the cord which was attached to the dog's collar and went on, leading his purchase, an alert and handsome, though exceedingly dirty, white bull terrier. Thus, attracting more attention than he liked, Fillmore traversed seven or eight squares. Then, when he was least expecting it, he encountered Dorothy Morgan.

"Why, Professor Fillmore, where did you find Trek?" exclaimed the young woman, ecstatically, stooping and gathering the bull terrier in her arms.

"Is that Trek?" he asked, noticing the dog for the first time.

"Why, certainly. He was stolen yesterday; and you can imagine my despair. Early this morning, some one who declined to give his name called me up by telephone, and told me that if I left the house at two o'clock and walked westward along this street I would find my dog; but I didn't expect to discover him in your custody."

"I bought him from a small boy, a few squares back," said Fillmore; "but I really hadn't the least notion he was yours. I have been devoting the day to a sort of mathematical experiment, about which I will tell you another time, and the purchase of the dog had something to do with it; but until you recognized him I had given him hardly a second glance. I am more than glad the thing has turned out as it has. It's rather curious, though, about that telephone message. I did not get my instructions in the same way, but I myself was asked to leave the St. Catherine Hotel at two o'clock and walk eastward along this street."

"Oh, I see it," said Miss Morgan, quickly. "The person who stole Trek didn't want to face me; so he arranged to put the dog in your care, and planned that I should meet you very soon afterward, before you disposed of him or lost him."

"That seems the obvious explanation," Fillmore replied; "but it unfortunately doesn't happen to fit all the circumstances of the case. For example, the man who gave me my instructions was one whom I couldn't possibly associate with the theft of the dog."

The girl, her mission accomplished, turned homeward; and Fillmore, walking by her side, dismissed from consideration everything except the fact that he was desperately in love with her and that the money in his pocket endowed him with a new, strange confidence. Less than half an hour before, he had said to himself that he would take the first opportunity to propose to her, and he could see no reason for declining it because it had presented itself sooner than he had anticipated. The precise wording of his declaration has no place in this story, it being quite sufficient to say that Dorothy Morgan arrived at home with a furious blush on her face, and that Fillmore, neither asked nor forbidden, went up the steps and into the house with her.

When, an hour later, Fillmore left the home of the girl who had just promised to marry him, it was with the intention of returning at the earliest possible moment. He had told Dorothy that he would break his engagement to dine with Langdon at seven o'clock; but she had insisted that he keep it, assuring him that if he did not linger at the table there would be ample time afterward for an evening call. At the first corner, Fillmore turned into a cross street to reach a car line. About the middle of the block, he was overtaken by a stranger, who addressed him:

"Professor Fillmore, I represent the Redington Detective Agency, and I have instructions to bring you to our New York office right away."

"What for?" Fillmore spoke sharply. It irritated him to have his dream thus rudely interrupted.

"I haven't an idea," replied the stranger, with the blandness of a big, good-natured man. "The superintendent simply said he wanted to see you."

"Suppose I decline to go?"

"In that case I would have to arrest you, sir. I have the authority to do it; but I hope you will see that it would be better not to let things go to that point. As it is, I'm merely asking you to take a little drive with me."

"Well, come on and let's get it over," said Fillmore, suddenly recalling his experiment. He had, quite unconscious of the fact that he had been thinking about it at all, taken for granted that his proposal to Dorothy Morgan, which was not fortuitous, but premeditated, had terminated the series of chance happenings for the day; but it seemed that in this he was mistaken, and he very readily entered a cab with the detective. Aware that he had violated no law, the young professor was not in the least apprehensive. He regarded the cab merely as a vehicle which was to carry him further toward the goal of an important discovery.

At the New York office of the Redington Detective Agency, which was on the fourteenth floor of a skyscraper, Fillmore was introduced to Mr. McLoughlin, the superintendent, a short, fat man, with a red face and an expansive smile.

"Please be seated, Professor," said Mr. McLoughlin, pointing to a vacant chair beside his desk. "I regret the trouble to which we have put you, but it was absolutely necessary. This morning, you had a rather curious adventure. In a house on Forty-third Street, a certain Mr. William Smith placed in your hands an envelope which contained twenty-five one-thousand-dollar bills. Of course, you were, and are, unaware that the money was stolen."

"Stolen!" Fillmore exclaimed. "Why, Mr. Smith said — but stop, here's the note I found inclosed with the bills."

The superintendent read it and laid it on his desk.

"It's a sad case, Professor," he said, "and we are trying to keep it just as quiet as possible. For many years, Mr. Smith was associated with one of the large financial institutions in this city. Recently, it was discovered that, at various times within the last six months, he has appropriated large amounts of money to his own use. The strange part of it, as our investigations have shown, is that he simply gave the money away, usually to mere acquaintances or entire strangers; always inventing some pretext which, as in your own case, led the receiver to think that the money actually belonged to him. Our information is to the effect that you merely happened to enter Mr. Smith's house this morning. Well, I will venture to say that Mr. Smith never heard of you before you passed his threshold, and that this note was written after the butler had told him your name. I am confident also that investigation would show that your father never met with any such loss as is mentioned here. In short, Professor, Mr. Smith's mental condition is a source of great anxiety to his friends. Possibly you noticed something queer about him."

"The whole affair impressed me as decidedly queer; but it did not occur to me that Mr. Smith was insane," Fillmore replied. "However, since you suggest it, I regard it as a very probable explanation. Of course, under the circumstances, I wish to return the money to its owners. I presume I may place it in your hands?"

"Certainly. I will give you a receipt for it," said Mr. McLoughlin. "My object in sending for you was to recover this money and, at the same time, to shield both Mr. Smith and yourself. I need hardly say that not the slightest suspicion attaches to you in this affair and that no hint of it will ever be dropped outside this office. I am very grateful for your courtesy in coming to us."

It would be untrue to say that the necessity of parting with the twenty-five thousand dollars did not cause Fillmore's spirits to sink to a degree perceptible to himself; but his depression was neither so marked nor so prolonged as it would have been if he had not realized the wonderful fact that he was engaged to Dorothy Morgan. Indeed, he was quite cheerful as he hastened home to dress to keep his appointment with Doctor Langdon.

"I'm going to cut this short, old man," Fillmore said, as the two seated themselves at the table. "You will understand why, when I get to that point in my story;" and he rapidly sketched the events of the day. Langdon listened interestedly, interjecting occasional comments. When, in the course of his narrative, the Professor announced his engagement to Dorothy Morgan, the Doctor stretched forth his arm and grasped his friend's hand.

"I congratulate you, Sam," he said. "That's the best piece of good fortune that is ever likely to come your way. She is one of the finest girls in the world, and I have always hoped you two would manage to hit it off."

"It means, of course, that Dorothy and I must somehow manage to live on my salary," Fillmore observed, reflectively, after detailing his visit to the office of the Redington Detective Agency, and the surrender of the twenty-five thousand dollars.

"Why not?" Langdon asked. "Lots of people get along comfortably on less."

"Altogether, I have had a remarkable day," said the Professor, in an evident hurry to be off. "As you must see, the indications are that chance plays a much larger part in all affairs than is supposed and that the accepted theory of probabilities is erroneous; but it will be necessary for me to make repeated experiments before announcing this as a conclusion, or attempting the construction of a new equation."

Some months after the marriage of Professor Fillmore and Dorothy Morgan, Doctor Langdon, one afternoon, dropped into the apartment they occupied.

"Where's Sam?" he asked, after greeting his hostess.

"He is out somewhere, trying to verify or disprove the theory of probabilities," replied Mrs. Fillmore, who had already caught certain technical phrases from her husband. "I don't believe it will ever come to anything, and I'm trying to make him give it up; but he absolutely declines to be persuaded."

"I wouldn't think of interfering with him," said Langdon. "It's the best thing in the world for him. Gives him the exercise that every professional man needs; takes his mind from his routine work; is beneficial every way."

"Doctor Langdon," said Mrs. Fillmore, suddenly, darting an inquiring glance at the face of her guest, "I've always wanted to ask you how much you know about Sam's remarkable experiences on the day he first set about testing the theory of probabilities."

"I guess he told me everything that happened," he replied.

"No, I don't mean that. Rather, what part did you have in arranging that certain things should happen to him?"

"Aren't you drawing your bow at a venture, fair lady?"

"Not entirely," she returned, with an amused little smile. "For example, I have always known that you bribed a boy to steal my dog."

"Heavens! What a charge!" cried Langdon, affecting horror.

"Still, a true one," Mrs. Fillmore said, decisively. "Our postman happened to notice and recognize the boy who made off with Trek; and the policeman on the beat afterward captured him. The urchin, when the officer brought him to see me, asserted that you had given him two dollars to steal the dog, and another dollar to stand at a certain place, on the following day, and offer him, at a ridiculously low price, to a young man whom you minutely described, and said would pass that way within five minutes after two o'clock. Do you deny it?"

"No," replied Langdon, with a grin. "I confess everything. You see, I wanted Sam to have a really enjoyable day; and I think he did, as practically everybody he ran against was acting under my instructions. However, that wasn't all of it."

"What else?" said Mrs. Fillmore, inexorably.

"Well, if you must have it, I knew that Sam was dead in love with you, and that the only reason he hadn't proposed was that he was dependent on his salary, which he mistakenly thought wasn't large enough to justify setting up an establishment. I wanted to see what would happen if, with twenty-five thousand dollars in his pocket, and believing it his own, he should suddenly encounter you. As you will easily understand, it was necessary to work out a plan for the day with minute attention to the harmonizing of every detail. The problem which troubled me most was that of bringing you and Sam together at just the right moment and in precisely the right mental attitudes. I found it difficult to hit on a way of sending him to your house, or, if I should succeed in this, of insuring that he would find you at home. Finally, I devised the idea of stealing your dog and of having Sam return him to you. I reasoned that his confidence and your gratitude would bring about a speedy understanding; and the event indorsed the infallibility of my method.

"No, please don't attempt to thank me, Mrs. Fillmore," he continued, facetiously, and with a volubility plainly intended to cover his retreat toward the door. "The occasional contemplation of your happiness amply compensates me. I have but two regrets. One touches the theft of your dog, which must have caused you great anxiety; and the other is that I couldn't afford to let Sam keep that twenty-five thousand. However, you have both completely recovered from these shocks. I pledge you my professional word that there has not been, in either case, the slightest impairment of the nervous system. Still, it is well to be cautious. Think it over before you let Sam into the secret of that adventurous day. Remember the risk involved in using a man's pet hobby for kindling-wood. Yes, thank you, I will drop in again soon. Good day, Mrs. Fillmore."

As he went down the stairs, Doctor Langdon wondered whether the pink flush which Mrs. Fillmore showed was due to rising indignation or to suppressed mirthfulness.

Star-Eyes.*

BY W. T. FERNANDEZ.

HAD just returned from extracting a .44 from the anatomy of one "Topty" Sullivan—the slug having been presented to him in the regular line of business, running a faro lay-out with stacked cards, by another eminent citizen known as "Silver Dick"—when I spied the Sheriff of Sweetwater County cantering down the street in my direction. He swerved toward me and, flinging himself out of the saddle, sang out: "Hello, Doc', old boy. How's tricks?"

"Oh, so so, Bill, so so," I replied, as I led the way into my office.

"Say, Doc', your medicine's mollifyin' to human nature!" exclaimed the Sheriff, soon after, smacking his lips, "not to mention the steadin' effect it has on the trigger finger. Now, would you consider that a sure enough proper gimcrack for a young girl on her sixteenth birthday?"

As he spoke he handed me a watch suspended from a gold clasp by three bars of rare workmanship in virgin gold. The clasp showed in low relief, a frontiers-man bending over a huddled figure; the first bar, a soldier and a woman before a priest—evidently a wedding; the second bar, a soldier kneeling at the bedside of a woman whose head was turned toward him; and the third bar, an officer falling at the head of a charge of infantry. The watch itself was a beauty, with the initials "D. C." in pearls, and on the inner case an inscription, "To Star-Eyes, from Uncle Bill."

Passing it back to him, I remarked: "Well, Sheriff, she'll be hard to please if that doesn't tickle her fancy. But who's the lucky young lady?"

* Copyright, 1905, by The Shortstory Publishing Company. All rights reserved.

* Copyright secured in Great Britain.

"Sit down, Doc', and I'll tell you the yarn."

I promptly laid away the probes I had been cleaning, and, making myself comfortable, prepared to be entertained. The Sheriff's yarns were never dull and often exciting. He knew men, loved horses, and honored women, and was big-hearted, square all the way through, and the quickest man with a gun I have ever seen. Watching the smoke rings curling from his pipe for a few moments, he began:

"It was about eighteen years ago, when Miles was a-chasin' Sitting Bull an' just keepin' that old heathen on a middlin' lively jump. If he sat down to have a smoke, there were Miles' 'dough-boys' a-comin' down the pike, just hittin' the high spots an' their Springfields banging at every jump. I was scout with the outfit, an' having a little personal matter to settle with that crowd—they'd wiped out a pal of mine the year before—I took a right lively interest in keeping them on a move that wasn't much short of bein' swift, and that's how I came to meet Star-Eyes.

"We'd tramped all day through the snow, with the thermometer so low that the mercury was tryin' to crawl out of the bottom of the glass, an' were havin' visions of a good feed of bacon and black coffee, when a Crow scout came in from the left with word of a village in that direction that'd stand beatin' up. Of course, old 'Beaver Coat,' as the reds called Miles, couldn't stand off that temptation, so off we goes to the left an' proceeds to make things lively for the red brother.

"It was a good-sized bunch of wickiups we stirred up, an' after a pretty fair scrimmage razooed them into the hills, from which they peppered us all night, without doing much damage. Well, along toward morning we pushed them back into the hills, an' as I was working up a ravine ahead of a bunch of the boys, what should I stumble over but a body more than half covered with snow. Thinkin' it was a dead Injun I was about to pass on when it moved. 'Hello,' says I, 'He's alive; I'll just pack him back to the 'saw-bones'—no offence, Doc'—an' have him looked over!' I kicked the snow away an' pulling off the blanket saw—a wounded buck? Not much, but an Injun girl, an' as pretty as a picture. There's mighty few good-looking Injun women, and they're always more'n half white, but they sure are beauties when you do find 'em. This one was about seventeen years old, an', as we learned later, was half white. I picked her up in my arms an' started back toward the village with her. Meeting some of the boys on the way, I told them of my find an' passed the word for the Doc'.

"He was soon on the ground an' sings out in about a minute, 'Why, she's been hit.' In a jiffy he had his knife out an', slashing away the buckskin jacket, bared her left arm and shoulder. 'Bout, face!' bawls old Gallagher, sergeant of "D" company, 'I've a gur-rl of me own.' You see the Doc' was so used to pulling the shirts off wounded men, an' we'd got so interested in our find, that we didn't quite twig what he was doing until that delicately tinted arm an' shoulder were bared. There we stood with our backs to the Doc' and his patient until he sings out, 'All right, boys. Slip an overcoat on a couple of rifles an' fetch her down to camp; we'll pull her through all right, I guess!'

"We got an ambulance up from the main column a few days later an' sent her in to the fort. Well, you know how we chased 'Sitting Bull.' He just hit the high spots in the Northwest country that season an' it was a mighty lucky thing for him that some cuss hadn't moved the Canadian line or we'd a-got him sure an' the result would 've been most unhealthy for him. As it was, the manner in which we camped on that old gentleman's trail has made Injun raids unpopular in that section of the country ever since.

"Getting back to the post some months after finding 'Star-Eyes' in that ravine — she'd told the Doc' that was her name when he first asked her; it seemed the reds called her that on account of her eyes, an' they were eyes, Doc' — I found her a graceful, slender young woman and the pet of all the women in the post. I also discovered that Dick Crane, who had laboriously built up a reputation as the laziest, cussedest soldier in the garrison, had suddenly chucked wine, women, and song an', with three stripes on his arms, was the example of the post. Now, Doc', when a fellow makes a flop like that you can always bet that he's either had a good fright or there's a woman in the case, an' we weren't long in locatin' the woman in that case. He was just head over ears in love with 'Star-Eyes' an' didn't give a cuss who knew it, an' when a fellow gets it as bad as Crane had it, he's got it pretty darned bad.

"We couldn't figure ont just how the lady took it, an' so the whole post settled down to watch the game, an' a mighty pretty sight it was to see them strolling outside the stockade, she with the grace of a deer an' he a typical regular, broad-shouldered, narrow-hipped, an' as straight as a ramrod.

"I was rather chummy with Crane, an' Star-Eyes always insisted on callin' me 'Uncle Bill,' so sometimes I'd go with them on their walks, an' so gradually learned her story. As near as I could make out from what she remembered, her mother had been a Clicatat and her father either an Englishman or a Dane, as she said he was very blond an' had blue eyes. She didn't know much of her history, but could remember coming down from the North with her parents when she was three or four years of age, an' as they travelled a long time, I figured they must have come from British Columbia. She said her mother was not dark like the women in Sitting Bull's village, but was much lighter, an' pretty. Now there's only one tribe in the North that such a woman could come from, an' that's the Clicatats; a tribe noted for its good-lookin' women an' big men.

"She remembered camping alongside a big river one night an' noticed her father seemed uneasy an' didn't come into the tent as usual, but remained outside with the ponies. Toward morning she was awakened by shooting an' war whoops of a party of hostiles that had crossed their trail an' followed it. Her father was killed defending his wife an' baby, an' she an' her mother taken prisoners. They were separated during the night, an' she never saw her mother again. The Injuns took good care of her until about a year later, when the cavalry swooped down on them one night, an' in the stampede she was forgotten an' was found by the soldiers in the morning, who didn't know just what to do with her until a black-bearded man spoke up an' said: 'Give her to me; my wife's coming out from the East shortly, an' as we haven't any child of our own we'll take this baby an' make her ours.'

"That man, Robert Halstead by name, told her afterward how they had found her that morning, an' how he had a soldier's wife at the fort take care of her until his wife joined him on his ranch. She'd lived with them for twelve or thirteen years when they were butchered by Sitting Bull's crowd in the campaign we'd just closed. Taking her alive, old Bull discovered in some way that she had Injun blood in her an' saw that she was respected an' protected, as he intended to give her to War Eagle for a squaw, an' so patch up an old feud between himself an' the young chief. We'd kept him hopping around so lively, howsoever, that he didn't get a chance to have a pow-wow on the matter, an' that's how it stood when we jumped his village that night. Star-Eyes had been trying to get to our lines when she was fired on an' hit by one of our pickets, who probably mistook her for a buck tryin' to sneak in close enough to pot an outpost.

"'But suppose we hadn't come along when we did, an' you had to marry War Eagle?' I asked her one day. 'Uncle Bill,' she said, 'I had a knife, long an' sharp, an' women of my race know how an' when to use a weapon of that kind.' An' she'd have done it, Doc', just as sure as we're sittin' here, for that's the kind of stuff Star-Eyes was made of.

"Well, things went along for a couple of months more without any show-down, until one day Crane was sent with a detachment down to the settlement, to fetch in a gang that had overstayed their leave an' were reported as good an' plenty drunk an' takin' the aforesaid settlement apart to see what made it tick. About nine o'clock that night one of the detachment got back, on a mule of the ambulance they had taken with them, with word of a fight an' a request from Crane for the Doc'. A few minutes later a second ambulance, with a cavalry escort, was splittin' the wind in a manner to give a jack-rabbit the snakes. All we knew was that the boozologists had put up a fight an' some one had been shot. It was daylight when the outfit got back, with Crane an' one of his men wounded, in one ambulance, an' the gin party lashed fast an' packed in the other.

"Miss Star-Eyes, with one of those woolly shawls over her head, had been watchin' the trail since before daylight, an' was the first to spot the wagons coming back. Her eyes must have been much better than ours, for she missed Crane from among the escort before we could distinguish one man from another of the gnard. I noticed a deep flush run up under her creamy-tinted skin and die away, leaving her face colorless. Her hand rested on the rail at the top of the foot-way along the top of the stockade, and clenched the wood until every tiny blue vein showed through the soft skin.

"'It's all right, little woman,' I said; 'He's probably inside with the prisoners!'" 'He's wounded,' was all she answered, an' down she flew to meet the ambulance. Right there is where the Injun cropp'd out. No hysterics, or faintin' or yelpin' around; she gave one look at his face, then took her place alongside the stretcher as they carried him into the hospital. He'd got a .38 through the lungs an' was sure in a bad way. Well, sir, that girl did nothin' the first two nights—the Doc' told me after—but just hang over Crane's bed an' tend to him, an' when he began to show signs of comin' around, she promptly skipped out an' went back to the major's house, where she lived as a companion to the major's wife, who was delicate.

"But as soon as Crane found out where he was, he wanted Star-Eyes, an' back she went to the hospital. Well, they settled it while he was laid up, for as soon as he was on his pins again, the women got mighty busy, an' Star-Eyes, with a good many blushes, asked me if I would be her official father at the wedding.

"We fetched the Padre up in style from the settlement, an' held the wedding in the mess hall. It just beat your swell affairs to a pulp, Doc'. The boys had scoured the hills for days before for wild flowers an' evergreens, an' the hall was filled with 'em; a stack of rifles stood on either side of the bride an' groom, an' a great bell of pine nettles, with crossed sabres, hung above them. The post band started the ceremony with the 'Star-Spangled Banner,' filled in the middle with the wedding march, an' wound up with 'Garry Owen,' an' if there's any better tune to get married to, or to fight to, than 'Garry Owen,' I haven't heard it. The colonel kissed the bride, an' the bride kissed yours truly, sayin', 'That's for finding me in the snow for my husband,' an' shootin' a glance at Crane that would've cleared the Kicking-Horse pass for a transport train in January.

Then a full troop escorted them to the railroad, twenty miles away, with the whole garrison whoopin' an' sowing the trail with the commissary rice. We got them aboard all right an' just as the train pulled out Star-Eyes kissed her hand to us, an' every galoot turned loose with all the artillery on him; we just tore things loose around that shanty.

"Somehow, the post didn't seem the same after they left. She was always doing little thoughtful things for everybody, an' many a man felt the sorrowful reproof in her eyes, after he'd been on a bat, more than he did the colonel's anger. She'd just raised the moral tone of that outfit about fifteen points, an' we were a lonesome bunch without her.

"They were away about a month, an' durned near the whole garrison met them at the station when they came back. If she was pretty before, she was just twice as pretty when they returned — there was a kind of happiness shinin' all around her that did our hearts good to see, an' we summed up that Crane was about the luckiest man this side of the great divide. The colonel made him a 'Top' sergeant an' told him if he didn't dig in an' get a commission he'd kick him out of the service. Crane didn't need any spurrin' in that direction, an' in a year's time he had his lieutenant's straps an' a little Star-Eyes in his home, an' was more in love with his wife than ever.

"I was the youngster's godfather, an' was in continual trouble 'n account of feeding her candy an' other sweets which her mother said spoiled her, an' I suppose she knew more about it than an old bach' like me. I was getting out the timber for some additions to the post an' was away in the hills almost every day. One evening when we got back, we saw something was wrong. There was a crowd around the hospital door an' a guard of about a hundred men around the guard-house. A few questions an' we knew the reason. Star-Eyes had been stabbed by a rum-crazed half-breed that used to hang around the post, doing odd jobs. Crane was with her, trying hard to control himself, an' the heavy guard was on hand to prevent the men tearing her murderer to pieces.

"'Pears that as she passed the entrance to the tunnel leading to the post magazine a little earlier in the afternoon, she missed the sentry. Thinking that strange, she entered the tunnel, to almost fall over the body of the man, whose skull had been crushed. At the same instant, catching a glimmer of light around a bend of the tunnel, the thought struck her that some one intended mischief. Stepping quietly forward, she saw the half-breed, with a pine-knot torch in one hand, fumbling at the lock of the magazine with the other. Knowing that every instant that torch sputtered there was an excellent chance of the whole outfit being blown to kingdom come, she slipped up behind him an', grabbing the torch from his hand, turned to run with it.

"Quick as a cat the half-breed was after her an' catching her just as she reached the entrance, screaming for the guard, drove his knife to the hilt into her back. Staggering a few steps further she fell outside the entrance as the guard came up on the double. With a blow of his rifle-butt the corporal sent the half-breed into a heap an' it gave them all they could do to club back the enraged troopers from the murderer as their lieutenant's adored wife was carried to the hospital; an' 'twas just about all the officers could do to land that fellow in the guard-house without the men tearing him limb from limb.

"Poor little woman! She died that night in her husband's arms. She had sent her love an' farewell to 'her boys,' an' asked me to be a father to her baby if anything should happen to her husband. 'You know, Uncle Bill, I would wish him to come with me, but I must not be selfish, an' the waiting will not be as long for me over there as it will be for him,'"

The Sheriff paused, then, violently blowing his nose, swore roundly at the dryness of the cut plug in his pipe. The smoke did affect one's eyes, until we discovered that the pipes had been out for some time.

"The colonel an' the major," continued the Sheriff, "with several other officers an' their wives came in an' talked with her for a few minutes. She was growing weaker rapidly, an' suddenly the Doc' whispered to Crane, who'd been praying at the foot of the bed. We left them, an' an hour later it took two orderlies an' the Doc' to unfasten his arms from around her body. They led him out, staggerin', blind to everything but his loss.

"We laid her away in a shady corner of the post cemetery an', a few weeks later, hung the half-breed. He confessed that in a drunken fit he had intended to blow up the fort in revenge for punishment the colonel had handed out to him for stealing forage, but claimed that fire-water had bewitched him, an' if it did, it also hung him — an' a cussed good job, too.

"I went into ranchin' after that an' didn't see much of Crane. I'd get a letter now an' then, an' writing back send some little thing for the baby.

"We talked about Star-Eyes the last time I saw him. He was a heartbroken man, Doc'; grizzled an' gray before his time an' only looking forward to meeting his wife again.

"'It's long waiting, Bill,' he said, 'I feel her near me at times, an' she looks at me from her child's eyes, but it's long waiting.'"

The Sheriff noisily knocked out his pipe and, standing up, shifted his belt.

"But his waiting's over now, Doc' — Crane found his Star-Eyes at Santiago. Yes, sir, an' he met her with a colonel's eagle on his shoulders an' a Mauser bullet plum between the eyes. That's why the pictures are on those bars, Doc', 'cause this gimcrack is going to my ward, Miss Dorothy Halstead Crane — but I most generally call her Star-Eyes."

In the Cane-Belt.*

BY JULIET BAYNE.

HE September sunlight lay warm and mellow on the dark soil of the cane-belt; on lands fallow since wheat harvest, and longer; and on the broad green of cotton-fields separated from one another by the zigzag lines of rail fences, gray and decaying. Tones of red and yellow showed here and there in the belts of woodland. The circling hills wore the purplish haze which in these latitudes appears with the first waning of the dry midsummer heat.

Gordon King, from the long front gallery of the white two-story house, was looking out half absently at the soft melancholy of the landscape, his gaze returning at intervals to the gaunt, smoke-blackened chimneys showing through a grove of oaks on a hill a half mile away. They were all that war had left of the Chessney homestead. Since its destruction the family, neighbors of the Kings for half a century, had moved into town. Only the night before he had been present at Florence Chessney's marriage. He had always thought, in the old days, that he should marry her himself. He wondered now that he should feel so little bereft. The four long years of battle, the strange confusion and bitter political evils which had followed, had sobered his vision. In the future that now stretched before him Florence Chessney could have had no fitting place; perhaps none was there for any woman. He sighed a little without being conscious of doing so.

Twelve strokes sounded out in slow resonance from the tall clock in the hall. Gordon walked to the eastern end of the piazza. A few minutes later a negro man, walking beside a wagon loaded with fodder, came up from the low-grounds and drove his team through the wide gate leading to the barn and stables. From the field across the road an old woman, her head wrapped in a yellow kerchief, took down one or two of the low bars and followed, bringing with her a white-oak basket piled high with cotton. The long rows she had left showed but little signs of her morning's industry; brown balls were bursting with whiteness in the warm sunshine, from others long tufts trailed wasting on the black earth. Hard as it had been to get the crop made, it was even more difficult to get hands enough to gather it.

* Copyright, 1905, by The Shortstory Publishing Company. All rights reserved.

* Copyright secured in Great Britain.

Gordon was calling some directions to the negro, Adam, when the sound of wheels was heard and a small one-horse wagon stopped at the front gate. The occupants made no move to get out, and he turned and went down the broad walk to see what they wanted. Both were plainly dressed, but a glance at their faces showed him that they had been accustomed to better conditions than present appearances indicated, and when the man spoke his voice was sweet and finely modulated. "Dinner is just ready," Gordon said. "Come in and eat with us, and then you can make known your business."

But the man declined. "I only wish to know if you will let me the house about a half mile back of your place," he said. "I understand it belongs to your estate."

"The house is unoccupied," King replied with some hesitation, "and has been for two or three years. Not much need of an overseer now," he added with a slight smile. "You say your name is Marwood? That's not an Alabama name, I believe."

"No, we are not of Alabama, sir," the stranger said in a manner which precluded further questioning.

King looked into his countenance. It was a volcanic face, in spite of its feminine cast. Passion was there, lack of self-restraint, a strange restlessness, but not falsehood nor treachery.

"Would you and your wife want a house set back so far from the public road as that?" he asked. "You know there are no neighbors for five or six miles, except my mother and myself. You would find it very lonely. I should think a place nearer town would suit you better."

A swift anger flashed for an instant in the man's dark eyes. "I suppose I can judge for myself what pleases me," he said haughtily.

But the woman interposed. "It is rather a lonely place," she said, speaking for the first time, "but we would not mind that; and the little grove around it seems rather pretty. I think we could soon make the house habitable." Her face, young and delicately beautiful, was pale from some recent suffering, and there was an anxiety in her manner which, however it might strengthen his suspicion that he was brought into contact with some mystery, appealed to Gordon's heart.

"You may have the house," he said, "although I could wish it were a better one; and there are some odds and ends of furniture stored away in useless corners of our house which my mother would be only too glad to send up to you if they would be of service."

There was a look of relief on the woman's face. "Perhaps you would be willing to give us the key," the man said, "and let us drive up there at once."

Again Gordon King experienced a little shock. "The house would be scarcely fit for your wife to go into now," he replied, "having been shut up so long. I will have it put in order, and perhaps a few repairs made, and you can take possession Friday or Saturday."

He repeated his invitation to dinner, but it was again declined, and the strangers rode away. In a few days they were established in their new home, but when they had lived there a year Gordon King and his mother knew no more of their past and but little more of themselves than on the day when they arrived. They neither wrote nor received letters, made no visits and had no intercourse with any one except the Kings, and that but seldom. The latter, indeed, would have willingly been friends with the young couple, but their advances were repelled in a manner as decisive as it was gracious, and the kindnesses they were suffered to render were but few. Marwood exhibited a fierce intermittent energy, working for days at some means of support and then leaving his wife to finish what he had begun. Then, when the period of lassitude and disgust had spent itself, he would return to his work, and so it happened that their necessities were met. The rich soil easily supplied them with garden products and they made something from the small orchard attached to their place and from their poultry. The wife had some knack for domestic affairs and seemed to find a modicum of happiness in these simple interests. It was as if her nature inclined to put forth tendrils of affection about whatever might surround her, which were chilled in their growth by her husband's sudden outbreaks of ill-temper and his frequent despondency.

"They seem somehow to have no object in life," Mrs. King said to her son, "when they ought to be in the heyday of its enjoyment. Marwood seems older, but I do not believe the girl is more than seventeen, and so lovely." But she made no effort to discover anything which the new-comers seemed inclined to conceal.

The summer after their arrival Marwood was sitting one day in the wide hall of the Kings' residence consulting with Gordon upon some matter of business. The drawing-room doors were open and King observed the eager look in the young man's eyes as they turned more than once to the piano standing opposite.

"Perhaps you play, Marwood," he said. "It has been a long time since the piano was used, but I shall be delighted to hear it again if you feel disposed to try it."

Marwood appeared to restrain his eagerness with something of an effort and went quietly to the piano, at first touching the keys slowly and caressingly. And then the impetuosity of his undisciplined nature asserted itself, and all emotions, from tender sorrow to a fierce triumph, found expression in the strains which he drew from the instrument. Mrs. King came softly into the room and sank into a chair to listen and the servants gathered about the door with awe and delight on their faces, but the young man played on as if unconscious of any auditors.

Suddenly he stopped, closed the piano, and turned to Gordon. "But you did not tell me the price of the peaches," he said, as if there were no such thing as music or passion in the world. His face was quite pale, and circles seemed to have gathered under his dark, restless eyes.

Mrs. King laid her hand gently on his arm. "Mr. Marwood," she said, "you have given us a great pleasure. I hope you will use the piano again, and quite as if it were your own."

But her son's forehead had on it that little frown which came there only when he was puzzled and displeased.

At another time, some months later, Marwood and his wife, finding the solitude of the long winter evening intolerable, as they sometimes did, went through the wooded path to spend the hours till bedtime with their neighbors. They found Gordon with his father's great leather-bound Shakespeare on a table before him, reading aloud to his mother.

"Do not let our coming interfere with your plans for the evening," Marwood said. "If you have another copy convenient, I will try some of the parts with you."

But Gordon laughed. "Here, take the book," he said, pushing it to the opposite side of the little table. "If your dramatic talent equals your musical gifts, I have no mind to risk my poor abilities in any such competition."

Marwood drew the volume towards him, his long nervous hands slightly tremulous. It was open at "Othello." "Yes, but not tragedy!" he said lightly. "We have enough of that here in Alabama."

He turned the leaves rapidly until he came to the "Merchant of Venice," and, rising to his feet, he began reading aloud at the second act.

Gordon had heard the play in Montgomery when he was a very young man. The bewildered delight of that evening came back to him now under the spell of Marwood's voice. He drew away from the lamplight and sat with his face in shadow, borne away in spirit to far-off lands of wonder and beauty.

Mrs. King drew a long breath as the reader finished the play and took his seat. "Dear Mr. Marwood," she cried, "you do indeed 'drop manna in the way of starved people.' But really one might guess that you are as great a trickster as Portia herself, hiding away your talents here in this lonely cane-belt."

The anger which seemed always to be slumbering just under the changeful expression of Marwood's countenance leaped suddenly to the surface. Gordon was confident that he discerned, mingled with it, an acute, overmastering fear, and he hastened to cover his mother's mistake.

"He makes us all feel as if we were under a disguise," he said lightly; "poor princes depriving ourselves of our real heritage in these working clothes of care."

There was a rush of feeling to the young wife's delicate face which neither Gordon nor his mother could read. The latter turned to her. "Bring your husband to see us often," she said, "and we will 'fleet the time carelessly, as they did in the golden world,' before there was any war and poverty."

When their guests were gone, the puzzled frown came again to Gordon's face. "Marwood ought to provide for his wife differently from what he is doing," he said. "She tries to make the best of her surroundings, but one can see her youth and hope are giving way under the strain."

"Some paralysis seems to have fallen upon the man's will," his mother replied. "It is he, and not his wife, who is wearing himself to an early death."

"Something is wrong, I tell you, mother," Gordon returned irritably, "and I won't be a party to it any longer. Marwood is capable of something better, and he ought to be driven to it."

"These are strange times, my son," the old lady said gently. "Our whole social fabric has suffered a great shock. If phenomena appear here and there which cannot be accounted for, it is not to be wondered at. These poor young people have found a refuge here, and are doing no one any harm — unless it be each other," she added with a sigh. "Be patient with them, Gordon; you will see the end of it after awhile."

It was soon after this that Mrs. King's health, frail for some years, began to give way rapidly. Needing more attention than her son could give her, engaged as he was with the affairs of the plantation, and opposed to having a strange attendant, the invalid depended more and more on the skilful and willing ministries of their young neighbor. Marwood, besides being in one of the moods when solitude was more agreeable to him than companionship, seemed glad for his wife to repay in a measure the consideration shown them, so she was at the house much of the time, Mrs. King beginning to call her by her first name, Edna, and coming to regard her almost as a daughter.

The early spring was at hand, bringing a thousand sweet odors and fair colors to the woods and fields. In the wide front yard the boxwood put out leaves of pale glistening green, flowering quince blushed a rosy red, and narcissus and daffodils scented the air. Something of the same fresh bloom appeared in Edna Marwood's face and manner. The tender mystery of a hidden grief, which had added to the peculiar charm that was nature's own gift to her, passed into a quiet satisfaction, lighted often by a mirthfulness even more alluring.

"When Edna sings for me, I forget my pain," Mrs. King would say, and Gordon himself often stopped to listen while the girl played the simple piano music that had been his sister's, or sang the old-fashioned songs which she used to sing in the same sweet girlish voice. Her presence in the house gave a new flavor to his uneventful life, and without his realizing it he came to depend upon her voice and smile as much as did his mother.

She tried to bestow something of the care upon the house which it had always received from its mistress, and he stopped one morning to help her as she was tying up the shoots of a young rose vine that was growing around one of the pillars of the long front gallery. There was a flush of color on her delicately moulded cheek, the light breeze stirred the rings of brown hair about her forehead; she seemed an integral part of the morning freshness and beauty.

The vine was adjusted to its place; she stepped down from the chair, and stood looking out for a moment at the landscape with its soft springing life faintly veiled under a tenuous blue haze. "It seems a pity for all this delicate loveliness to pass into summer," she said. "I wish it might always stay as it is."

"I have often felt so myself," he answered, at one with her mood. "But spring this year seems particularly beautiful. Perhaps it is always so, but I cannot remember that I ever enjoyed one quite so much before."

A sudden, fearful consciousness of why this had been so swept over his being like a flood. He averted his eyes from hers instantly, but not till he had seen a swift shamed misery quench their clear light. The warm blood swept over her face and neck. "Your mother must be needing me," she said unsteadily and turned away from him.

He had seen the rapids before them, as one older than Edna Marwood, and it was only because his hand was steady and his heart pure that he could so quickly turn back his craft from the luring, treacherous abyss. Even as he did so, he felt sick and wounded. This sweet woman, under other conditions, might have been as the light of earth to him, and he must put her away from even his thought. And she, too, was suffering, with a suppressed, hidden, innocent suffering for which he felt to blame.

Perhaps his mother understood. "Gordon," she said a day or two later, holding his hand with the caressing dependence that he loved, "I think you had better take me to some specialist in the North. Adam can be trusted with the laying-by of the crops, and some family in Selma will be only too glad to hire the house for the summer."

It was arranged as she suggested, and among new scenes, and with the anxiety that he felt for his mother to take his mind somewhat from himself, Gordon King tried to adjust himself to the strange sense of loss which haunted his heart. The operation which the New York physicians found necessary was entirely successful, and after some weeks he and his mother started homeward, stopping on their way to visit a college mate of Gordon whose mother had also been a dear friend of Mrs. King in her girlhood.

"This world is a very little world, after all," Gordon said to Robert Dunnington, as they had their first talk together, carrying it far into the night. "Do you know, Robert, when I carried mother to the hospital, the first physician I saw was Henry Bizzell? Don't you remember how much we saw of him that winter that you and I spent in Paris? How the years seemed to melt away as we stood together again! And, oh! how he did work to save mother. It was as if he were her own son."

Dunnington's face answered the expression of his friend's with warm sympathy. Never was a woman better worth saving than Mrs. King!

"Yes," Gordon repeated in a softened voice, "it is a little world and a kind one. I don't know how many unexpected meetings I had in New York, where I had thought myself an absolute stranger. Why, one day I happened to take a seat in a street car right by the surgeon of our ward when I was a prisoner at Elmira in '63. I used to get pretty mad with him then, but I was glad to meet him again. And he seemed pleased to see me as soon as he could bring me back to mind. I rallied him about having so poor a memory, and he said that nobody could be expected to recognize a skeleton which had taken a notion to clothe itself in flesh again. I suppose I do look a little more like a human being than I did then."

Dunnington smoked meditatively. "Yes, this is a little world," he said slowly; "and yet now and then somebody manages to lose himself in it very successfully — quite as much so as if he had gone to another planet. There was a strange case of that kind among some people who lived in this very city. The family was named Courvoisie. The father was a rich planter who lived a few miles down the river. At least he was rich before the war, and just at its close he managed, through one of his agents, to buy up a lot of cotton, and when the price rose to fifty cents a pound he had nothing to do but set himself up again. Not on his plantation, of course. He came to town and opened a bank and lent money to other people less fortunate. For a year or more he prospered wonderfully, and then there was a crash. Who it was went wrong, nobody ever knew. The cashier managed to get away, having first destroyed the books, and that same night Courvoisie killed himself; so no one could tell what really did go with all the money. Speculation, I always believed. Courvoisie had got the taste of it and could not stop."

Dunnington relighted his cigar. "But that's not all. Years before, Courvoisie had met a beautiful actress in New York and had persuaded her to marry him. Whether she was happy or not, I don't know. She died after seven or eight years, leaving two daughters, one an infant. The elder daughter grew up, a tall, splendid looking woman, inheriting her mother's versatile talents and a great deal of her beauty. But she had also a strange, restless disposition, always thirsting for adventure, and a temper so sudden and violent in its outbreaks that every man she knew was afraid of her. Actually, the things that girl said and did before she was twenty years old have gone into the traditions of half the watering places in Virginia."

For some reason Gordon King felt his pulses quicken, but he made no comment, and Dunnington proceeded with his story:

"Of course she had a great many admirers, but not, I think, a single real lover. And she chose to fasten her affections — with what intensity you may perhaps imagine — upon a young man not at all her equal. I don't believe he ever loved her, but the girl had so compelling a way that he hardly knew how to escape from her, if I may say such a thing. But when her father killed himself and she was left penniless—it was known that she had given up everything in sacrifice to the family honor except a few jewels which had been her mother's—she offered him his freedom, and he promptly accepted it. That was the extreme drop of bitterness in the cup. Miss Courvoisie disappeared, nobody knew where, and nobody ever has known. It was soon after the war, and people were too busy looking after their own affairs to keep the poor girl in mind. It was generally believed that she would go on the stage, but she never did."

"I believe you mentioned a younger sister." Gordon struggled to keep his voice free from the excitement he felt.

"Oh, yes; certainly. She went with her sister, of course. It was said that in spite of the difference in their ages and temperaments, they were very devoted to each other. Mamma always thought that, but for the family misfortune, the younger girl would have made an even more brilliant social success than her sister, although of a different sort."

Gordon sat with his fingers clenched hard together, trying to speak.

"Now, isn't it strange whatever could have become of those two girls?" Dunnington concluded, rising to light his companion to his room.

Gordon turned and going to the window looked down at the black waters of the river with a pale sheen of light glistening and wavering upon them.

He stood there a moment with his face to the warm darkness of the night. "Do you happen to remember the younger sister's name?" he asked.

"Yes, I do," Dunnington said. "She was a great friend of Hallie's when they were children. Her name was Edna."

The New Minister.*

BY DON MARK LEMON.

JUDITH QUIMBY, spinster, was a thorn in the side of the body-social of Watervale, for Judith Quimby, spinster, owned the only church in that little village — she had inherited the edifice from her father, who had got it by foreclosure — and being the proprietor of the church-building she had taken it upon herself to dictate the views of the clergy who should hold forth from its pulpit.

Judith Quimby, spinster, was a Baptist, and so also were the divines engaged to wake spiritual thunder in the pulpit of her church. Watervale likewise was Baptist, but Judith Quimby's eagle nose was a sensitive spiritual thermometer, which she thrust into the depths of each of her clergyman's wells of faith, and if that thermometer registered the slightest variation of a degree from the temperature of her own wells of faith, then Judith Quimby, spinster, arose, accused the unhappy clergyman of heresy, showed him to the door of her favor, and drove him forth peremptorily. In a year she had dismissed four men of God.

It would seem that the good people of Watervale might have taken into their own hands their spiritual peace and welfare, engaged that particular divine who most pleased them, and have set him to preaching from an improvised pulpit in a barn, if need be; but ah! what is an ordained minister, what even a religion, without a spired, cupolaed church? No! their clergyman must preach from a regular pulpit in a regular church edifice, and Watervale being too needy to erect a house of worship of its own, needs suffer all the inconvenience and vexation visited upon it by the eccentricities of the owner of the one church in the village — Judith Quimby, spinster.

* Copyright, 1905, by The Shortstory Publishing Company. All rights reserved.

* Copyright secured in Great Britain.

The month of August, embracing five Sundays, passed, and during this no inconsiderable period Watervale remained wholly without public religious edification, whereat the villagers began to murmur, but Judith Quimby set her thin lips and stood firm. The Lord, in good time, would send a minister of true orthodoxy, she assured her townspeople, and better that He should forget their needs than that the village should be corrupted by heresy. Better no prophet than a false one.

The first week in September came and went, and it began to look as if Miss Quimby herself would have to fill her empty pulpit, when her deacon, Timothy Watts, Esq., received a letter bearing the postmark of a city in Michigan.

Breaking the envelope, he perused the following amazing communication :

MR. TIMOTHY WATTS, Watervale.

Reverend Sir:—

Learning that you are the deacon of the Baptist Church of Watervale, we take the liberty of introducing ourselves to you.

We are known as The Clergyman, Church and Choir Supply Company, and are incorporated under the laws of the State of Michigan. We are prepared to supply the public with clergymen of every denomination, and all shades of the same. Our correspondent has informed us that your village is at present in need of a Baptist clergyman. May we have your permission to submit samples? It will cost you nothing for examination, and our terms for the goods, delivered, will be as follows: One hundred dollars a year, payable quarterly in advance.

The clergyman chosen by your constituency will preach one timely, original sermon each week, with opening prayer and benediction, and be kept in working order at our expense.

Only fine-looking clergymen in stock, and we call particular attention to the fact that all sermons can be examined before delivery, and edited to suit the tastes of the congregation.

We furnish choirs, too, in all languages and at the most reasonable prices.

* We also are prepared to furnish portable or non-portable churches, at the shortest notice.

All religions constantly in stock, and new forms and rituals constantly added.

In case you should wish to consider our proposition further, we will be pleased to mail you our handsome illustrated catalogue, or, better still, have our agent call in person upon you.

Trusting to receive an early order, and guaranteeing you the highest satisfaction,

We subscribe ourselves,

THE CLERGYMAN, CHURCH, AND CHOIR SUPPLY COMPANY.

"Well, I swan," exclaimed Deacon Watts, removing his glasses and rubbing the indentation that they had made in the bridge of his nose; "this beats me!"

Again the man of peace perused the typewritten communication, then, folding it carefully, placed it in his pocket and went over to Judith Quimby, spinster, for further light.

Two hours later Deacon Watts posted a letter directed to The Clergyman, Church and Choir Supply Company. Judith Quimby had commanded that unique company to send down an agent to Watervale with samples of Baptist clergymen and the terms for a choir of two male and two female voices: "For while we are about it, deacon," snapped Miss Judith, "we might as well see if we can get a choir that can praise the Lord, without scratching each others' eyes out at the same time!"

The following Tuesday an agent of the C. C. and C. S. Co. arrived and with the aid of her deacon, Judith Quimby finally arranged with him for a clergyman and a choir of four voices which she thought would prove quite satisfactory. She then posted a notice to the effect that her church would open on the following Sunday, with clergyman and choir engaged at her own expense, and invited every one to attend.

Sunday came, and with it came the congregation to listen to the new clergyman and the new choir. What manner of man would the former be? And the choir? Really, Judith Quimby must be at ruinous expense to bear the whole cost out of her private means.

At precisely ten o'clock Deacon Watts stepped forward and opened the door leading from the vestibule to the church, and the congregation entered the house of worship. The new clergyman and the choir were there before them, the divine standing in his pulpit, the choir seated on his right.

A murmur of surprise and pleasure broken from the congregation. What a noble clergyman! young, handsome, saintly; everything a pastor should be! And the choir — what a fine-looking group! One could almost see their perfect voices in their intelligent, spiritual faces.

The congregation was now seated and, lifting his outstretched hands, the new clergyman opened the morning's worship with prayer and then immediately chose his text and delivered his sermon. The little flock held its breath in admiration: never before had it heard such a sermon as this — a masterly searching out of the vanities of these latter times, delivered in a rich, sonorous voice, and with true Baptist fervency. Verily, a summer of spiritual glory had descended upon the village of Watervale!

"The choir will now sing the forty-seventh hymn," directed the new clergyman, and at once the choir arose with open hymn-books and, taking the most graceful attitude, rendered the song in consummate style; then, decently, soberly, Christianly, without staring at face or bonnet among the congregation, sat down.

Judith Quimby was triumphant—her townspeople elated, amazed, curious.

The new clergyman now arose and, speaking in a more familiar tone than heretofore, introduced himself to his flock as the Reverend Richard Bonifield, and trusted that only the highest esteem and affection would ever exist between himself and his congregation. Then, lifting his hands, he spoke the benediction, and immediately afterwards the congregation arose and made its exit to the vocal music of the choir.

In the vestibule Judith Quimby was instantly surrounded, to be congratulated by every one upon her choice of a new clergyman, and thanked for her noble services and, with a questioning inflection, her great expense. Miss Judith bowed condescendingly, but still her townspeople lingered.

"Really, dear," burst out little Mrs. Pinchin, dying with curiosity, "but we cannot go until we have shaken hands with the new minister, and thanked the choir for their beautiful singing."

Judith Quimby swept out her arms, making a little open space, the better to address her audience, and began: "It is impossible, friends, that you meet the new minister or thank the choir. Impossible! I repeat. The Reverend Richard Bonifield, and his charming choir, are not frail flesh and blood, as we are; they see not as we see, hear not as we hear, feel not as we feel; your flatteries cannot touch them, nor your heresies corrupt; they are above the follies and illusions of this little world. In fact, my friends, you have to-day listened to a sermon and to religious singing rendered by servants of a new and incorruptible church. At last have Christian souls found the perfect choir and the perfect minister! The Reverend Richard Bonifield and his choir are not men and women, but steel and wax figures—worked by our deacon — and within each of these figures is a phonograph, the records of which have been and will in the future be edited by me, so that hereafter we shall have the true faith delivered in the true way. Friends, I wish you a very good morning this blessed Sabbath day, and I assure you that you will always be welcome to this incorruptible church which I have established in your midst. One word more — hereafter there will be no collection, except that for foreign missions.

The Turning Worm.*

BY EMMA C. WOOD.

SOLD Dolly to-day," Mr. White said, with a side-long glance at his wife, as he rode into the barn lot.

"Jonas!"

"It's no use keepin' a dry cow, Sereny, an' Harvey Jones offered me a good price for her, so I thought I had better take it."

"But Dolly seems like one of the family," his wife answered in mild protest. "I declare at times she acts 'most like a human. What's he goin' to do with her?" she added quickly.

"Keep an' feed her well," he said.

"I hardly feel as if I could let her go," Mrs. White said, thoughtfully.

"The stock here now are catin' their heads off, so what's the use keepin' a dry cow? I'll give you the money to buy that hat you was wantin' the other day," added her husband hastily, noting the look of dissatisfaction on his wife's face — "the one with all them flowers an' fixin's on it at the mil'ner's."

"I'm needin' a hat, goodness knows!" admitted Mrs. White, waveringly. "I've been wearin' the one I've got, three years this coming May — puttin' feathers on it for fall an' winter, an' flowers an' ribbons for spring an' summer, till I'm tired an' sick of the sight of it, an' I reckon other folks air, too."

"That one we saw was a reg'ler stunner," insinuated Mr. White, adroitly.

"Yes, an' I'd like powerful well to have it, only I don't feel as if we ought to sell Dolly. She'll get homesick, goin' to a strange place."

"Fudge!" cried Mr. White. "I never seen such a woman. You don't want the trees cut down, ner the fool flowers grubbed

* Copyright, 1906, by The Shortstory Publishing Company. All rights reserved.

* Copyright secured in Great Britain.

up, an' half the time you hate to kill the chickens, because you've petted 'em," he added in an injured tone.

His wife gave a little sigh as she thought of her childless lot, but made no answer.

The next day when Harvey Jones came to drive the cow away, Mrs. White ran up-stairs and threw her apron over her head to shut out the sight.

However, when Dolly bawled in loud protest as she was driven through the yard, her mistress could stand it no longer, but rushed to the window and called out after the retreating horseman—"Mr. Jones! Mr. Jones! you must promise me to take good care of Dolly. You must, indeed!"

"Of course," answered Harvey Jones, "I'll see that she gets plenty to eat," and he winked gravely at Jonas White as the promise was made.

A week passed by. It was a long and lonely one to Serena White. Since the day Dolly had been driven off, it really seemed as if a member of the family had gone away. Jonas White could never understand the vacancy her going had left in the simple, plodding life of his wife.

Even the possession of the coveted hat did not compensate for the loss of Dolly. Mrs. White began to regret that she had ever consented to the parting—indeed, had she? She had simply held her peace and let it occur.

Dolly was her very own cow, too. Mr. White had given the calf to her when its mother died, before it was even weaned, and Serena White had partly brought it up by bottle. No wonder she had become so attached to the gentle creature.

Jonas had tried to laugh his wife out of her soft-heartedness, but the feeling of regret still remained.

During the following week a neighbor dropped in one morning, on her way to town, and in the course of the talk she said:

"An' so you've sold Dolly? I shouldn't have thought you'd be willin' to have her taken to the cattle-pen, seein' you've made such a pet of her."

"The cattle-pen?" echoed Mrs. White in surprise. "I don't know what you mean."

"My Jim was at Curley's distillery the other day, where they air sloppin' cattle to fatten 'em for the market, an' he saw Dolly there. He hardly knowed her, though, she looked so or'nary. It 'pears to me ag'in nature to feed cattle on that slop," continued the visitor, as her hearer made no reply. "They was created to eat the grass of the field — the Bible says so — an' to have to swallow that bad-smellin' stuff is enough to turn anything's stomach, especially a cow's when she's been used to good sweet meadow-grass an' hay. No wonder Dolly wouldn't touch it for days an' days. They had her chained to a trough."

"Chained! Dolly chained!" Serena White sat bolt upright in her chair, and her voice ended almost in a wail.

"Yes, you see when some of the cows won't drink the slop, they chain 'em at the trough until hunger an' thirst forces 'em to. I've heard it runs some of 'em mad. It seems a cruel thing to do, don't it?"

Serena White looked at her visitor in a dazed sort of way, and nodded her head.

"Air you sure it was Dolly?" she stammered, at last.

"Why, la! yes, Jim knew her, though she looked that thin an' pitiful. I felt most certain you didn't know about it."

Scarcely had her visitor gone, when Serena White hurried out and hitched up the horse to the light buggy. On the way townward there seemed but one recurring thought to her perturbed mind, and she found herself again and again giving voice to it.

"Dolly in chains!" Dolly, who had never had a harsh word spoken to her in all her life on the farm, who was as gentle and docile as a lamb!

Serena White's eyes grew misty as she looked out across the Kentucky fields and meadows, green and sweet with the presence of May.

How fresh and lush the tender grass lay on the hillsides, and the young buds on the trees seemed to have burst into sudden leafage at the touch of a magician's wand.

Dolly had spent her whole tranquil life amid such scenes of verdure and peacefulness, often knee-deep in clover, and with the cowslips and violets tangled amid the dewy grass where she was wont to graze — and now? Something like drops of sultry rain fell into Serena's lap as she drove along.

When the town was reached, she went at once to Curley's distillery, and, as she expected, she found her husband lounging about the place. It was a favorite loafing spot for the neighborhood.

Jonas White made no secret of his surprise on seeing his wife, but along with it there was a certain embarrassment of manner.

"Where air the cattle-pens?" Mrs. White asked briefly.

"Who told you Dolly was here?" he questioned in return.

"I didn't learn it from you," she answered with emphasis, as she climbed out of the buggy.

"If you just follow your nose, it will take you straight to the pens," suggested one of the loungers with a laugh. Indeed, there came at the moment, on a passing wind, a strange, sour, sickening odor, that offended her nostrils where she stood.

"It ain't a fit place for a lady to go," asserted Jonas hastily.

"From the way it smells, it doesn't seem a fit place for any human—or a beast either," answered Serena White, "but I'm goin'."

There was a positiveness in his wife's tones altogether new to Jonas, and, vaguely puzzling, he humbly followed in her steps.

To the west of the distillery were the cattle-pens, a long, double row of low wooden sheds, down the center of which ran a line of troughs in which the slop was fed the cattle.

The air was reeking with a sickening odor, a smell of sour, fermenting slop, damp, foul floors, the steaming bodies of the cattle, chained so closely together at the troughs that each beast had only room to crouch in an uncomfortable position on the slimy floor when it grew tired of standing.

Thus they are slopped—these mild-eyed, docile creatures, born in shady vales and pasture-lands, now held by captive chains for dreary weeks and long months, through the sweet, alluring spring far into the torrid summer. Here they are imprisoned, unable to exercise, within sight of grass-carpeted fields and sweet-smelling meadows of clover, fed on hot slop, which many refuse at first, until hunger compels them to eat, without a drop of cool water to allay a feverish thirst that the hot slop creates, and having to endure this dreary captivity until an artificially made plumpness prepares them for the market.

As Serena White went into the sheds, one cow had got her chain entangled in the horns of a fellow-captive, and was trying to regain her feet, but at each effort her hoofs slipped on the wet floor, and she would fall again to her knees, only to be kicked by a brutal keeper to urge her to another attempt at regaining her feet.

"Stop it!" cried Serena, shrilly. "Undo the chain!"

At the sound of her voice, the poor beast turned its head as far as the chain would permit, and bellowed piteously. Its hair was matted and filthy with the stains of the floor, around its neck the iron chain had worn off the hair and rubbed into the flesh, while only a short, stubby tail poorly served to drive off the flies that swarmed throughout the shed.

Serena White felt her heart go out in pity toward the poor creature as she looked at it, then the next moment she suddenly gave a loud cry almost as piteous as the beast had uttered: "Dolly!"

At the name, the forlorn animal struggled once more to gain a foothold on the dank floor. It partly arose to its feet, when the shortened chain jerked it to its knees again, bruising and skinning them afresh, and so it lay trembling and moaning like a thing of human suffering.

Straightway Serena White flung herself down on the foul planks of the floor, unmindful of their foulness, indifferent to the unsightly stains upon her dress, her whole mind centered on the helpless object of her pity and affection.

"Dolly! Dolly!" she cried, tugging at the choking chain.

By this time the keeper of the pens had unfastened the end of the chain attached to the trough, and in kindlier manner assisted the woman and then the cow to their feet.

Jonas stood by, uncomfortable, and uncertain what to do. His wife's next words advised him of what she intended to do.

"Take off that chain!" she said to the man.

"But, Sereny," her husband expostulated, "we've sold Dolly. She ain't ours, you know."

"She was mine, an' you sold her, an' got the money for her. Now you can buy her back."

"But," began he. She interrupted him.

"Jonas White, listen to me! I've been a good and dutiful wife to you. Look at these hands! They're hard an' rough, workin' for you. I've helped you to pay for the farm, an' to buy the cattle an' stock that's on it. All I ever got has been my board an' clothes, an' not too many of 'em, at that."

"I haven't complained though; I never intended to. I married you for better or worse, an' I intended to stick to my bargain. Now, I'm goin' to ask you for somethin' more'n my board an' clothes. I'm goin' to ask you to buy back Dolly, an' bring her home. She was mine, in the first place, an' the money you got for her ought to have belonged to me, so I'm only askin' for what's mine, after all."

"Sereny, this is all nonsense," insisted her husband. "Of course Dolly was yours, but I gave you the money for that hat, an' I'll give you enough besides to buy a dress."

"No, Jonas, I'd rather go in rags all the rest of my days. I don't want a new dress. I only want Dolly. Why, she was like a human. Time an' again I've talked to her when there wa'n't anything else to talk to, an' she seemed to understand. I really believe she did. She never heard a single cross word spoken to her. She didn't know what a blow or kick meant. Look at her now!"

Serena White's voice dropped back to a calmer tone.

"I'm goin' back home, now, an' I'll look for you along presently with Dolly. Until she does come, Jonas White, I'll never cook another meal's victuals for you, nor raise my hand to do a single stroke of work — not so long as I live — an' I'm a truthful woman, Jonas!"

.
As the trees were casting long shadows eastward, and the cool, sweet breath from the fields and meadows blew a fresh greeting to the evening star, Serena White, from her post of observation on the front porch, saw a man, slowly driving a cow, turn into the lane that led to the house.

The impatient watcher gave a sigh of relief at the sight, then went into the kitchen, and, taking off a gay, flower-laden hat, thrust it ruthlessly into the stove along with the kindling, and lighted the fire for supper.

Coffee Does Hurt

Make the trial yourself — leave off
Coffee 10 days and use

POSTUM

FOOD COFFEE

in its place.

That's the only way to find out

Postum is a sure builder and when you cut out the coffee and use Postum instead, you get a taste of health, for the aches and ails begin to leave. You may THINK you know, but you don't until after the trial.
Remember

"There's a Reason"

Get the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in each pkg.

Cook's Malto-Rice

A Pure, Ready-to-eat Rice, Malted

RICE contains more nutriment and supplies more energy to the human body than anything that grows out of the ground, and is the easiest food to digest.

MALT as a marvelously beneficial stimulant and tonic, man had known for centuries, but only yesterday did he learn to combine it to the greatest advantage with his food.

COOK'S MALTO-RICE IS A PERFECT BLENDING OF MALT AND RICE.

Thoroughly cooked, ready to serve from package to dish.

EVERY PACKAGE OF MALTO-RICE IS STERILIZED.

It's pure, free from "lumps," germs, and will keep.

Ask your grocer to-day for a package of

COOK'S MALTO-RICE

15 Cents

EVERY WOMAN LOVES A DIAMOND SAVE A DIAMOND—WIN A HEART

The passionate feminine wish is for Diamonds. When a woman is truly beautiful she wears Diamonds. With Diamonds she becomes doubly attractive. Diamonds enhance the charms of all women. Sweetheart, wife, daughter and mother eagerly desire fiery, flashing aristocratic gems. And woman's intuition is right. The scintillating jewels make her beautiful, aid her in achieving social triumphs, and, in necessity, are her instantaneous asset—her savings bank. A wise woman knows she can get prompt cash for her Diamonds—wherever she may be—in any part of the world. Write for Catalogue. Write Today.

Write for a Catalogue The Loftis Catalogue is free. Write at once for a free copy of our luxurious and beautiful catalogue containing 1,000 illustrations of Diamonds, Watches and Jewels—66 pages of valuable information explaining our popular system in every detail, giving lowest quotations. We also send free to all applicants a unique and interesting Diamond Souvenir Booklet. Write at once and we will send you both Catalogue and Booklet free, to your great pleasure and advantage.

The Loftis System of Diamonds on Credit, which won the Gold Medal at the St. Louis Exposition, is easy and confidential, enabling far-away buyers to select the finest Diamonds, Watches and Jewels. The article is sent on approval to your home, place of business or express office as preferred, so you can examine it, being free to buy or not, as you please. We deliver anywhere in the United States, paying all charges, taking all risks.

Our Credit Offer All honest people—employer or employee—can open a confidential account with us. One-fifth the price to be paid on delivery—you retain the article—pay balance in eight equal monthly amounts, sending cash direct to us. You will not miss the small monthly payments from your income. Save a Diamond. Better than a Savings Bank. Diamonds are predicted to increase in value 30 per cent during the present year. Write for Catalogue—1000 Illustrations.

Our Cash Terms You select your Diamond. You pay cash for it. We give you a written guarantee that you can return the Diamond any time within one year, and we will pay you all you paid for it less 10 per cent. You can thus wear a $50.00 Diamond Ring or Stud for one year—return it to us—get your $45—which is less than 10 cents per week for one year.

Guarantee With each Diamond we give a written guarantee of quality and value signed by a member of our firm. Write for Catalogue—66 pages.

Write at Once to us for Catalogue of Diamonds, Watches and Jewels and you will obtain every advantage by doing business with the Diamond Headquarters. Write for Catalogue.

LOFTIS
BROS. & CO. ESTD 1853

DIAMOND CUTTERS
Mfg. Jewelers and Opticians.

DEPT. H 52.
92 to 98 State St.
CHICAGO.

Copyright, 1906, Frank's Agency, Chicago

You Can Earn

from $3000 to $5000
A YEAR IN THE REAL ESTATE BUSINESS.

No other business yields the profits that are made every year in the real estate business.

You can learn the business, its principles and practices, thoroughly and technically, in a few weeks' time, without it interfering with your present employment.

We teach you the real estate business.

You can make more money in the real estate business in less time than you can in any other because it is the biggest and best business in the world. It is a profession and the business of a gentleman.

Other special features of our method are: We furnish you lists and descriptions of exceptional offerings of all kinds of property situated to all parts of the United States and Canada; we list your property; we furnish you our "Real Estate Journal" of business opportunities, investments, etc. We give you instruction in general brokerage and insurance.

Notice for yourself to the newspapers and magazines the tremendous growth of the real estate business — railroads selling land grants; the government opening new homestead territories; timber concessions being sold; factories going up in small towns; new subdivisions, etc.

Summer is a splendid time for you to commence this course. You will then be graduated by Autumn when real estate will be booming.

Real estate firms in the cities pay large salaries to competent men, and if you do not desire to go in business for yourself we will list your name, free of charge for one year, with one of the largest placing bureaus, and you will have the privilege of applying to this bureau for a situation in the city.

Write for our free booklet. It will interest you.

H. W. CROSS & CO.
Dept. H, Tacoma Bldg., Chicago

INVESTORS

desiring to realize the Large Interest and Profits possible in legitimate Mining, Oil, Timber & Smelter Investments and Dividend-paying Industrial Stocks, listed and unlisted, should send for our Booklets, giving full information, mailed free.

DOUGLAS, LACEY & CO.,
Bankers & Brokers, 66 Broadway, New York

Send for this

Print your own cards, circulars, &c. Press $4. Small newspaper press $16 Money saver. Print for others, big profits Typewriting, copy, printed rules sent. Write to makers for catalog, presses, type, paper, &c. THE PRESS CO. MERIDEN, CONN

IT PAYS BIG TO AMUSE THE PUBLIC WITH MOTION PICTURES

HUMOROUS AND OTHER VIEWS. NON-EXPERIMENTAL. ESSENTIAL as our instruction Book and "Amusement Guide" tells all. We furnish Complete Outfits with Big Advertising Posters, etc. Humorous dramas brimful of fun, Travel, History, Religion, Temperance work and songs illustrated. One man can do it. AN UNLIMITED OPPORTUNITY

In any locality for a man with a little money to show in churches, schoolhouses, lodge halls, theatres, etc. Free $10 to over $100 per night. Others do it, why not you? It's easy; write to us and we'll tell you how. Catalogue free.

AMUSEMENT SUPPLY CO.,
454 Chemical Bank Bldg., CHICAGO, U. S. A.

Hotel Belleclaire

Broadway and 77th Street,
New York.

Seventh Avenue, Amsterdam Ave. and West 130th St. Cars pass the door. Luxurious rooms for permanent and transient guests.

Restaurant
a Feature.
Exquisite Palm Room.
Art Nouveau Cafe.
Royal Hungarian Orchestra.

"Most Artistically Beautiful Hotel in the World." Can offer few single rooms, with bath, beautifully furnished, suitable for two people, $60 per month.

TRANSIENT RATES:

One Room, with bath.....$2.50 per day
Parlor, Bedroom, with bath, $3 and $5 per day
Parlor, 2 Bedrooms, with bath, $5 and $7 per day
Every improvement known to modern ingenuity.

Write for our magazine, "The Hotel Belleclaire World."

MILTON ROBLEE, Proprietor.

WOMEN TO SEW

Shields at home. Plain Sewing only. It's all piece work. Good pay; no material to buy. Send reply envelope for particulars and prices we pay. Universal Co., Dept. 100, Phila., Pa.

LADIES

to do piece work at their homes. We furnish all material and pay from $7 to $25 weekly. Experience unnecessary. Send stamped envelope to ROYAL CO. Desk B. C. 34 Monroe St., Chicago, Ills.

Darken Your Gray Hair

DUB'S OZARK HERBS restore gray, streaked or faded hair to its natural color, beauty and softness. Prevents the hair from falling out, promotes its growth, cures and prevents dandruff, and gives the hair a soft, glossy and healthy appearance. IT WILL NOT STAIN THE SCALP, is not sticky or dirty, contains no sugar of lead, nitrate silver, copperas, or poisons of any kind, but is composed of roots, berries, herbs and flowers. PACKAGE MAKES ONE PINT. It will produce the most luxuriant tresses from dry, coarse and wiry hair, and bring back the color it originally was before it turned gray. Full size package sent by mail, postpaid, for 25 cents. OZARK HERB CO., Block 18, St. Louis, Mo.

Eyesight Restored

Consulted Lids, Cataracts, Pterygiums, and all forms of Eye Troubles cured by ACTINA. No stitching. No dragging. ACTINA is sent on trial. Write for our two-page book. It is interesting and instructive. Free on application.

New York and London Electric Assn.,
Dept. 44 B. 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo.

The Equitable

Life Assurance Society of the United States, 120 Broadway
New York

HENRY B. HYDE, Founder

The Equitable Leads—

In Amount Paid in Dividends to Policyholders
In Prompt Payment of Policies to Beneficiaries
In Financial Strength—Surplus over $80,000,000

For many years The Equitable has paid a larger aggregate amount in dividends on its policies than any other company.

DIVIDENDS PAID

In 1900	-	-	$3,481,641.00
In 1901	-	-	$3,742,520.00
In 1902	-	-	$4,477,924.00
In 1903	-	-	$5,682,296.00
In 1904	-	-	$6,001,903.00

The Equitable pays its policies more promptly than any other company—usually within twenty-four hours after proof of death.

DEATH CLAIMS PAID IN THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA

In 1900	-	96%	within one day
In 1901	-	96%	within one day
In 1902	-	98%	within one day
In 1903	-	95%	within one day
In 1904	-	96%	within one day

The Equitable is the strongest life insurance company in the world, both in amount of surplus and in ratio of assets to liabilities.

Whether Camping Touring Sailing Idling

or At Homing, your Horizon of Happiness will be full and you and your companions will be Insured Against the Blues if you will spend the trifling sum of 65 cents for the following

Vacation Treat

This Treat consists of 20 back numbers of THE BLACK CAT which contain 100 of the most original, clever and fascinating stories ever put into print. In the lot, which, under oath, cost more than Thirteen Thousand Dollars, are 39 Capital Prize Tales, including "A Few Bars in the Key of G," costing $2,100; "A Tale Never Told," $1,000; "Cap'n Penfield's Pinks," $500; "The Backsliding of Miss Mindy," $1,300; "The Bigelow House," $500; "A Bridegroom's Substitute," $250, etc. Upon receipt of 65 cents (stamps will do) we will deliver, at our expense, the entire 20 numbers containing the 100 copyrighted stories. The Shortstory Publishing Co., 144 High St., Boston, Mass.

Under Oath

Commonwealth
of Massachusetts

COUNTY OF SUFFOLK, SS.

I, T. E. Dyer, President The Shortstory Publishing Company, publishers of The Black Cat, hereby certify that over Thirteen Thousand Dollars was paid by The Shortstory Publishing Company for the stories comprised in the foregoing offer.

Subscribed and sworn to before me,
Leonard G. Roberts,
Notary Public.
Boston, May 1, 1905.

REVERSIBLE
Linene
 Collars and Cuffs

Have You Worn Them?

Not "celluloid"—not "paper collars"—but made of fine cloth, exactly resemble fashionable linen goods and cost of dealers, for box of ten, 25 cents (2½ cents each).

No Washing or Ironing

When soiled discard. By mail 10 collars or 5 pairs cuffs for 25 cents. Sample collar or pair cuffs for 6 cents in U. S. stamps. Give size and style.

REVERSIBLE COLLAR CO., Dept. O, Boston.

GINSENG $35,000.00 made from half acre.
 Easily grown in Garden or Farm.
 Roots and seeds for sale. Send for postage and get booklet AF, telling all about it.
 McDOWELL GINSENG GARDEN, JOPLIN, MO.

Ladies having fancy-work to sell, doilies, centrepieces, Battenberg, drawn-work, plain and fancy sewing, also to order work.
 LADIES' EXCHANGE, Dept. 7, 24 Monroe Street, Chicago.

"Mushroom Raising"
 This book shows you the great profit in mushroom raising. It tells you how you can make money on a very small outlay. To all interested, we will send this book free. Write before the limited edition is exhausted.
 UNION SEED COMPANY (Inc.)
 Dept. 11, 104 Hanover St., Boston, Mass.

NOT A WOMAN IN CALIFORNIA
 Who doesn't know that
RULOFSON'S CALIFORNIA TOASTER

will make beautiful golden brown toast; heats rolls or biscuits to a nicety; takes the place of a double boiler—preventing scorching.

Try One!

Only 25c. You'll be pleased

If your dealer hasn't them, we will tell you where obtainable. In exchange for the name of your hardware dealer on a postal, we will send you FREE, a handsome Souvenir of California.

A. C. RULOFSON COMPANY

SOLE MFRS. AND PATENTEES

234 Crossley Building - San Francisco, Calif.

"These two I use daily."

ARNICA
Tooth
Soap

Is antiseptic; preserves while it beautifies. No spilling or wasting; convenient and economical.

25 Cents
 At all Druggists

STRONG'S
Arnica Jelly (Carbolated)

Keeps the skin free from roughness and pimples. Nothing better for sunburn or chapping; also for cuts, bruises, burns and all eruptions. Keeps the skin soft, smooth and delicate. The collapsible metal tube is convenient and unbreakable.

Take it with you wherever you go. If your druggist hasn't it—Send to us. Sent postpaid on receipt of 25 cents.

C. H. STRONG & CO.
CHICAGO

Hints for the Vacation.

An attractive 150-page pamphlet, full of the temptation of river, field and mountain, is published by the Central Vermont Railway, under the style, "Summer Homes of Vermont, Islands and Shores of Lake Champlain, Adirondacks, and Canada." It is filled with excellent pictures of Summer-time scenes in places far from the press of city life. There are complete descriptions of the various resorts, convenient time-tables and lists of special excursion rates, of which the wise may take advantage. Those who have not yet settled the great question as to where the vacation shall be spent can hardly do better than consult this pamphlet, which may be obtained by sending six cents in stamps to J. E. Bentley, General Passenger Agent, Central Vermont Railway, St. Albans, Vt.

LEARN TO WRITE
ADVERTISEMENTS
 If you want to earn from $25 to $100 a week, get into the Advertising Business. Taught by mail. A beautiful prospectus will tell how, sent free upon request.
PAGE-DAVIS COMPANY
 Address either Dept. 825, 90 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, or Dept. 825, 110 Nassau Street, New York.

MY FREE BOOK

It called "How Money Grows" and tells: How to tell a good investment; how to invest small sums; how you can convert $100 into $150.25; how to guard against poor investments, etc., etc. If you are able to save $10 or more a month from your income you should not fail to own a copy. NOT AN ADVERTISEMENT of any investment but full to the brim with information that everyone should possess before they invest a dollar. Ask for it on a postal and I'll send it FREE by return mail.
W. M. OSTRANDER, 132 North American Bldg., Philada.

10 Stacks of Silver Dollars

as high as the 10 successful contestants

And a little fortune of Silver Dollars to be divided among 830 other readers of the NATIONAL MAGAZINE

Given for Little "Heart Throbs"

What is your height worth to you?

Easy for Everybody

Will you be measured with silver dollars?

SINCE the first announcement was made that Ten Thousand Dollars had been placed in the First National Bank of Boston to be finally given away for Heart Throbs it is astonishing how many clippings, poems and amusing stories have been entered for prizes.

The contest is so simple and fair that everybody who can read and can appreciate what is good, what is pure, or what brings out the emotions of the heart, can enter his choice in our great competition and receive a "fair and square deal" when the awards are made.

Certainly you can put your hands right on that story you once read and thought it was the best you ever saw; it was so awfully funny. And that other one that made the tears start in your eyes and the big lump rise in your throat when you read it. You have these in your pocketbook, or in the old scrap book, or possibly in your writing desk. Somewhere, surely, you have one or two that are worth the huge pile of silver dollars that we are eager to exchange for them.

There are no unreasonable conditions. The clipping or copied extract must not be longer than 500 words. You must hasten to send in your contribution as the contest will close and the prizes begin to be awarded on or before Sept. 1st, 1905. NATIONAL subscribers only are eligible to the competition.

840 PRIZE AWARDS. WILL YOU TAKE ONE?

Besides the first ten prizes, each a stack of silver dollars as high as the head of the prize winner, there are two awards of $50.00 each for the ten next best stories; twenty awards of $25.00 each for the third grade; one hundred awards of $10.00 each for the fourth grade; two hundred awards of $5.00 each for the fifth grade; and five hundred awards of $1.00 each for the sixth and last grade. U. S. Senator Allison and Admiral Geo. Dewey will make the final awards on behalf of the judges. These names are an absolute assurance of the sincere good faith and confidence this "Heart Throb" contest merits from you. If you are not already a regular subscriber, send along the accompanying coupon with your subscription for six months and with one clipping, or a year's subscription and two clippings. Be sure to do so soon as the contest will be closed as soon as 50,000 new subscribers are obtained. Understand the NATIONAL is a dollar-a-year magazine and is worth all you pay for it. There is nothing to lose—you may secure a handsome award. When you know Joe Chapple, you will like his NATIONAL MAGAZINE. Show this to your newsdealer and say there is something for him if he will send for particulars. Joe Chapple, Editor.

National Magazine, - Boston, Mass.

B.C.
8-05
Enclosed find 50 cts. and clipping for entry in the "Heart Throb" contest.

Name _____

Street _____

Town _____

State _____

$1.00 for a year's subscription gives privilege for two entries, etc.

CUT THIS OUT AND SEND TO NATIONAL MAGAZINE, BOSTON, MASS.

Safety!

A piano costs a good deal of money. Easy to make mistakes in its selection. The poorest piano often has the most eloquent salesman. How can you be safe in getting the full value of your investment?

One way is absolutely safe—

GABLER PIANOS

offer it. Made to-day as for more than a half century, with the true, conscientious, artistic thoroughness that alone can give long service and satisfaction. The tone is famous—pure, sweet and powerful—and it lasts; use only makes it richer and sweeter.

Send for information as to

THE GABLER PLAN OF PURCHASE

An Easy Way to Get the Best Piano Built.

ERNEST GABLER & BRO.

459 Whitlock Ave.

Bronx Borough, New York

JIU-JITSU
COMPLETE SELF-INSTRUCTOR
Fully illustrated, on this most interesting and valuable science. Enables the student to master Jiu-jitsu in the shortest possible time, and is equal to any other system or course of instruction.
Sent postpaid on receipt of 3 DIMES
JIU-JITSU PUB. CO., 121 West St., N. Y.

A ROUND CHEST—A HANDSOME FIGURE

What Do We Mean?

It is when the lungs are expanded to their full capacity. Write for Respiration Yoke to-day, $1.95, and get the Figure. HALLSTROM CO., Dept. J, N. Tanawanda, N. Y.

WOMEN

DO you want to use your spare time by earning $1.00 per hour? or help furnish your home FREE. If so, address

THE BENEFIT CO.
P. O. Box B 2711
BOSTON, MASS.

MEN

I am
John Mackintosh
the Toffee King

TOFFEE

If it's Mackintosh's Toffee, it's the delicious old English candy that is taking America by storm. If it isn't Mackintosh's, you don't want it unless you want an imitation.

Mackintosh's Toffee The Original Old English Candy
sold in tin cartons, my name and face on every package. No, not a chewing candy. You break off a small bit and let it dissolve in the mouth.

If your dealer smiles and says he hasn't got Mackintosh's, but has an imitation, I am always ready to send my Toffee by mail. Send ten cents for the first size package or $1.00 for a large four-pound family tin, but try your dealer first. John Mackintosh, Dept. 24, 78 Hudson St., N. Y.

TOILET POWDER.

There is no toilet article in the selection of which greater care should be used than a toilet powder.

In these days of imitation and substitution there is so much of inferior goods on the market that it is necessary to be continually on one's guard. Highly scented toilet powders are so frequent as to be a continual source of danger. Such inferior products will often do a permanent injury to a delicate skin. It is far wiser never to take chances with an unknown article. Be sure, rather, to insist upon a trade-marked product of recognized merit. With toilet powder, as with most other lines of goods, it is safer to trust an old-established house with years of experience and a reputation for making only the best. Mennen's Toilet Powder is a trade-marked article, which has for years been recognized by physicians as the best preparation made. The absolute purity of its ingredients and the exercise of the greatest care and skill in its manufacture have given the product of the Mennen Co. a quality of uniform excellence. That is why your physician recommends it.

For your protection, Mennen's face (the trade-mark of the Mennen Co.) is on the cover of every box of the genuine.

All first-class dealers carry Mennen's Toilet Powder and will supply it if you insist. It is supplied by the Government for both Army and Navy.

The fact that over 11,000,000 boxes were sold during 1904 is evidence of the continuing public approval of Mennen's.

GERHARD MENNEN CO., NEWARK, N. J.

Dollar Germs

Many a mortal has Dollars up his sleeve and doesn't know it. In other words, the head of many a man or woman holds the foundation, the frame-work, the incident or plot of a Money-Bringing Short Story. The trouble is How to Write It and Where to Sell It.

The prize tales embraced in the offer on page x of this issue practically and profitably answer these two perplexing questions. Write your stories as these are written, and The Black Cat will buy them.

To make sure of these 100 stories, either as a treat for yourself or for a friend, do not put off your letter until to-morrow, but order to-day.

No one who aims to write Real Stories or who loves to read Real Stories should miss next month's issue.

The Shortstory Publishing Company

We never read stories unless they are accompanied by full postage for return.

Fisherman's Luck

in Summertime means freedom from Prickly Heat, Chafing and Sunburn.

MENNEN'S

Borated Talcum

TOILET POWDER

always brings immediate relief. Be sure that you get the original.

For sale everywhere or by mail, 25 cents. Sample free.
Gerhard Mennen Co.
Newark, N. J.

QUILTED MATTRESS PADS

THREE SCORE and TEN YEARS is a long life, yet about THIRTY YEARS of it is spent in bed. Then why not make your bed as comfortable as it can be made.

Quilted Mattress Pads will not only make it comfortable, but as they are spread over the mattress, they will protect it, and will keep your bed or baby's crib in a perfect Sanitary condition.

Quilted Mattress Pads wash perfectly, and are as good as new after laundering.

They are sold in all sizes by
Dry Goods dealers

EXCELSIOR QUILTING CO.
15 Laight Street : : : New York

The Start to a Better Salary

Half of getting anywhere is in making the start.

If you want to be successful—if you want to better your position—make the start. We have made the start easy, and we have made the whole way to success easy. So easy, in fact, that you will be surprised at the insignificance of the barrier that has kept you back. The start to success is to simply fill in and mail to us the coupon below.

Read over the list of occupations in the coupon, mark X before the one you want to enter, fill in and mail the coupon to us. By return mail we will tell you how you can easily, inexpensively, and in your spare time qualify yourself for the position you want and we'll send proof of it in the form of facts as to what we have done for others.

International Correspondence Schools

Box 834 SCRANTON, PA.

Please explain, without further obligation on my part, how I can qualify for a larger salary in the position before which I have marked X

Bookkeeper
Stenographer
Advertising Writer
Show Card Writer
Window Trimmer
Mechan's Draughtsman
Ornamental Designer
Illustrator
Civil Service
Chemist
Textile Mill Supt.
Electrician
Elec. Engineer

Telephone Engineer
Elec. Lighting Supt.
Mech. Engineer
Surveyor
Stationary Engineer
Civil Engineer
Build'g Contractor
Architect
Architect's Draughtsman
Architect
Bridge Engineer
Structural Engineer
Foreman Plumber
Mining Engineer

Name _____

Street and No. _____

City _____ State _____

How To Grow Tall

WOULDN'T YOU LIKE TO ADD FROM TWO TO FIVE INCHES TO YOUR HEIGHT?

To be a "good height to dance with"? To be "tall enough to see in a crowd"? To improve the symmetry of your figure and add to your general appearance? It is entirely possible for you to increase your height and accomplish these other advantages in your own home without taking any internal treatment, without drugs, without operation, without pain or injury to yourself, without putting yourself to any inconvenience.

FREE TO ANY SHORT PERSON

In order that anyone can learn how to get increase in height, we have prepared an interesting book for full distribution, explaining why some people are short and others tall, and telling how short people can add from two to five inches to their height, and get all the advantages that good height carries with it. All you have to do is to write for this book, stating your height, your weight, your age, your sex, and we will send you full particulars about the secrets of getting increased height and good figure. Address at once,

The Cartilage Co., 318, Unity Bldg., Rochester, N. Y.

DIVIDEND

PAYING MINING, OIL, TIMBER, SMELTER, AND INDUSTRIAL STOCKS making possible LARGE INTEREST AND PROFITS, listed and unlisted, our specialty. Booklets giving full information mailed free on application.

DOUGLAS, LACEY & CO.,

Bankers & Brokers, 66 Broadway, New York

Be Your Own Boss!

MANY MAKE $2,000.00 A YEAR. You have the same chance. Start a Mail Order Business at home. We tell you how. Money coming in daily. Enormous profits. Everything furnished. Write at once for our "Starter" and FREE particulars. B. C. KUEGER CO., 155 Washington Street, Chicago, Ill.

ALLEN S. OLMSTED WINS IN COURT, The Foot-Ease Trade-Mark Sustained.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Supreme Court has granted a permanent injunction with costs against Paul B. Hudson and others of New York City, restraining them from making or selling a foot powder which the court declares is an imitation and infringement on "Foot-Ease," now so largely advertised and sold over the country. The owner of the trade-mark "Foot-Ease," is Allen S. Olmsted, of Le Roy, N. Y., and the decision in this suit upholds his trade-mark and renders all parties liable who fraudulently attempt to profit by the extensive "Foot-Ease" advertising, in placing on the market the spurious and similar appearing preparation involved in the case. This the court declares was designed in imitation and infringement of the genuine "Foot-Ease." Similar suits will be brought against others who are now infringing on the Foot-Ease trade-mark rights.

ALLEN S. OLMSTED, Le Roy, N. Y.

A WATCH
A GREAT OFFER.—Every watch we sell, sells others—we will send you at once upon receipt of $4.00 a beautiful Gold Hunting Case Watch, gentlemen's or ladies', you pay the balance, 50 cents a month for four months. The greatest Watch Offer ever made the public.

AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL CO.,
212 Union Street, Providence, R. I.
THE JEWELRY CITY.

COSY CORNER PILLOW COVERS

For $5.00 we will deliver to any part of the U.S. a beautiful leather pillow cover, front and back, with four velvet applique Poinsettias, the wonderful California flower, on it; or used 50 cts. for leather mat showing sample of the applique Poinsettia, or write to THE CALIFORNIA ARTS, 216 E. Colorado St., Pasadena, Cal.

BARODA DIAMONDS.

JUST DISCOVERED.

Brilliant as the greatest, one-fifteenth the cost of the standard acid test, and PUEBLO EXPERTS' GOLD 800 TEST; thorough examination allowed before payment. Write for catalogue and special terms etc.

THE BARODA CO., Dept. 25
71 Wabash Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

FREE FOR SIX MONTHS

THE MINING HERALD, Leading mining and financial paper, giving valuable information on mining and oil industries, principal companies, best dividend paying stocks, and showing how immense profits may be made on absolutely safe investments. Write for it today.

A. L. WISNER & CO., 32 Broadway, New York

A RICH MAN

can easily get richer because every opportunity for money-making is presented to him, but where does the man of moderate means come in? The man of small means is the man I want to talk to. I want him to write to me for information that will show him how he can have a chance to get ahead in the world. I want him to invest small sums with me, from $1 to $10 per month; I will not accept any larger amounts. Send for my booklet which tells about an investment that I can personally recommend—no "fake" fraud or foolishness; just a plain talk to intelligent people. Don't delay—write for my booklet today. I am reliable and can give the best kind of references. W. C. Hammer, 212 Harrison Bldg., Philadelphia, Pa.

Great Suit Offer

Get this notice out and mail to us and if we have no agent in your town we will send you FREE, by return mail, postpaid, a big assortment of cloth samples, fashion figures, cloth tape measure, order blanks, etc., and we will name you prices on men's suits made to measure clothing that will be so much lower than you ever heard of that it will surprise you; terms, conditions and privileges that will astonish you; a free trial offer on a suit in your town we will get a profit on every dollar we sell in his territory. We then turn all our business over to him. That's why our agents make so much money.

WE WANT A GOOD AGENT IN YOUR TOWN

He can make $1,500.00 to $1,800.00 per year. If you write us before we get an agent there you will get a wonderful offer. As soon as we get an agent in your town he will get a profit on every dollar we sell in his territory. We then turn all our business over to him. That's why our agents make so much money.

If you want a suit for yourself, answer all our before we get an agent there, and you will then get quick before we get an agent there, and you will then get all our great inducements, or if you would like to see our agent tell us all about yourself. Address.

AMERICAN WOOLEN MILLS CO., Chicago.

IF IT'S PURITY YOU WANT

then let us serve you. It stands to reason that we, who run one of the best equipped distilleries in the world, making an average of 9,580 gallons of Pure Whiskey a day, are in a better position to supply your wants than a dealer who has to buy his goods and probably doesn't sell one-half of 9,580 gallons in a whole year. Just think that over. HAYNER WHISKEY goes straight to you from our own distillery. That's why it's so good and pure. There is no dealer or middleman to adulterate it. When you buy HAYNER WHISKEY you save the enormous profits of the dealers. That's why it costs less than you pay them for much inferior goods.

HAYNER WHISKEY is recommended by doctors and used in hospitals and by half a million other satisfied customers. That's why YOU should try it. Your money back if you are not satisfied.

Russian Imperial Embassy, Washington, D. C.

"The Hayner Whiskey which has been used at the Embassy has given universal satisfaction. It is an admirable household whiskey."

Count Cassini, Russian Ambassador.

HAYNER WHISKEY

4 FULL $3.20 EXPRESS
QUARTS 3 PREPAID

OUR OFFER We will send you in a plain sealed case, with no marks to show contents, FOUR FULL QUART BOTTLES OF HAYNER WHISKEY FOR $3.20, and we will pay the express charges. Take it home and sample it, have your doctor test it—every bottle if you wish. Then if you don't find it just as we say and perfectly satisfactory ship it back to us AT OUR EXPENSE and your $3.20 will be promptly refunded. How could any offer be fairer? YOU don't risk a cent.

Orders for Ariz., Cal., Col., Idaho, Mont., Nev., N. Mex., Ore., Utah, Wash., or Wyo., must be on the basis of 4 Quarts for $4.00 by Express Prepaid or 20 Quarts for $15.20, by Freight Prepaid.

THE HAYNER DISTILLING COMPANY

Dayton, O. St. Louis, Mo. St. Paul, Minn. Atlanta, Ga.

DISTILLERY, TROY, O.

ESTABLISHED, 1866.

Mullins Stamped Steel Boats Can't Sink

Staunchly built of strong, rigid steel plates with air chambers in each end like a life boat, they are buoyant—strong—safe—speedy—as much better than a wooden boat as a steel greyhound is better than a wooden schooner. They don't leak—don't dry out—wear out, or become waterlogged and can't sink because of the air chambers.

Motor Boats, Row Boats, Hunting and Fishing Boats

Mullins Steel Motor Boats are elegantly equipped, full-fledged, torpedo stern motor boats—not row boats with motors in them. They are breaking all records.

Motor Boats, 16 ft. 1½ h.p. $135; 18 ft. 3 h.p. $240. Row Boats $20 up

All boats are sold direct, and every boat is fully guaranteed. Prompt deliveries.

Send for 1905 Catalogue

The W. H. Mullins Co., (The Steel Boat Builders) 148 Franklin St., Salem, Ohio
Member National Association of Engine and Boat Manufacturers.

16-foot Torpedo Stern Motor Boat, 1½ h.p. Price, $135.

$56⁵⁰
Portland
AND RETURN

LEWIS AND CLARK CENTENNIAL—
JUNE 1 TO OCT. 15 1905—

From Chicago, with correspondingly low rates from other points, via the Chicago & North-Western Railway. Choice of routes via Omaha, Cheyenne and Granger, via St. Paul and Minneapolis, through the mountain scenery of Colorado, via Yellowstone Park, through the Lake McDonald Country or the Canadian Rockies. Return via California at slight increase in rate.

A great opportunity to visit one of the greatest grain and fruit raising countries, the largest fishing and lumbering industries, and some of the most aggressive, rich and growing cities in the world.

These low rates are in effect daily, May 23 to Sept. 30. Full particulars in regard to the exposition and descriptive of the Pacific Northwest sent to any address on receipt of two 2-cent stamps.

W. B. KNISKERN,
Passenger Traffic Manager,
CHICAGO.

THE
NORTH WESTERN
LINE

Pabst Extract

When you are wearied from work or worry, when you feel listless or languid, or when you cannot sleep, just use the "Best Tonic." It is simply rich, pure malt—the most healthful, wholesome and upbuilding food known to science. It gently soothes the tired nerves, makes digestion easy, and brings to all the sweet sleep of childhood.

Pabst Extract

25c at all druggists.

Write for free booklet telling how Pabst Extract is made, and why you ought to have it in your home.

Pabst Extract Dept.,
Milwaukee, Wis.

HOT TO COOL

A person can keep the body 8 to 10 degrees cooler in hot weather by Sensible Breakfast

Try—A little Fruit,
2 pieces of very hard Toast,
A cup of well-made POSTUM,
and a dish of not more than 4 teaspoonfuls of

GRAPE-NUTS, and Cream.

You can enjoy any kind of weather and feel well nourished.
"There's a Reason."

Hydrozone

is indorsed and successfully used by physicians in cases of Ivy Poisoning, Sunburn, Mosquito Bite, Etc. Its action is prompt. No injurious effects possible.

HYDROZONE is sold by best druggists.

Preparations with similar names are concoctions containing only water, oil of vitriol, sulphurous acid and inert impurities. Not genuine without my signature:

Charles Marchand

Chemist and Graduate of the "Ecole Centrale des Arts et Manufactures de Paris, France."

87 Prince Street, New York.

A FREE TRIAL BOTTLE

of HYDROZONE, sufficient to demonstrate its healing properties, will be sent on receipt of attached coupon.
(Name your druggist.) Requests without coupon ignored.
Only one free bottle to a family.

Write legibly. Coupon good only until Sept. 4, '06.

Name.....

Address.....

19..... City..... State.....

Druggist.....

For Summer Travelling

when the hot days come and you get the vacation fever be sure to take a

MATSUMI

Bamboo Suit Case

with you. The extreme lightness, handsome appearance, and waterproof Japanese seaweed paper lining, which absolutely preserves delicate dresses from dust and moisture, all combine to make it the ideal travelling bag for ladies' use.

Originated and brought to this country by us. Made from specially selected bamboo, so closely woven by hand to a stout bamboo framework that it cannot sag or grow buggy. Made in two sizes: 20 in. long, 11 3/4 wide, 5 deep, weight 24 oz.; 22 1/2 in. long, 14 wide, 6 1/2
deep, weight 30 oz.

If you cannot obtain them at your dealer's send us his name and we will send you circular and full information of how to get them.

BUNKIO MATSUMI, 281 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.,
At the Sign of the White Rabbit.

"The Nation's pleasure ground and sanitarium."—David Bennett Hill.

THE ADIRONDACK MOUNTAINS

The lakes and streams in the Adirondack Mountains are full of fish; the woods are inviting, the air is filled with health, and the nights are cool and restful. If you visit this region once, you will go there again. An answer to almost any question in regard to the Adirondacks will be found in No. 20 of the "Four-Track Series," "The Adirondack Mountains and How to Reach Them;" issued by the

NEW YORK CENTRAL

A copy will be mailed free on receipt of a two-cent stamp, by George H. Daniels, General Passenger Agent, Grand Central Station, New York.